Whales from 1B

the coast during "watch" weeks.

Volunteers who complete the one-day training can select a whale-watching site, where they will be stationed to assist visitors in spotting gray whales and maintain a count of whales spotted.

In addition to the winter whale migration in December, grey whales will make a return trip in the spring, March 24 through 31, 2018.

Volunteers can register for the training online at www.whalespoken.wordpress.com, as well as select a watch site.

The training is required for new volunteers, and returning volunteers are encouraged to repeat the course every few years to learn the latest gray whale research results.

The first of three training sessions is set for Saturday, Dec. 9, in Newport, at the Oregon Coast Community College (As of press time, only 10 spots remained).

Training will be delivered by Dr. Bruce Mate, an expert on whales and director of the Oregon State University Marine Mammal Institute.

Additional volunteer training is scheduled for Saturday, Jan. 20, 2018, in Charleston at the Oregon Institute of Marine Biology, and also Saturday, Feb. 10, 2018, at the Nehalem Bay State Park Meeting Hall in Nehalem.

For whale seekers simply wanting an up-close and personal view, Dockside Charters in Depoe Bay will offer daily whale watching excursions starting in mid-December.

Just south of Lincoln City, Depoe Bay is considered the "Whale Watching Capital of the Oregon Coast" and is also home to the Oregon State Parks Whale Watching Center.

"We offer 90-minute whale watching excursions for the winter," says Loren Goddard, one of the owners of Dockside

Charters. "Typically our excursions are an hour long, but because the whales are moving fast to Mexico, we have to accommodate for that. We recommend that visitors make reservations early because the winter excursions are very popular."

Goddard says what makes the trips so popular is that "Visitors are curious about whales on the coast. And the whales are just as curious about us as we are of them," Goddard explains. "The best part is when they come right up to the boat. Seeing these mammals up-close is a very special experience."

Gray whales can grow up to 45 feet in length (13.7 meters) — longer than a city bus — and weigh more than 45 tons (41,000 kg).

To learn more about the winter and spring whale-watching seasons, contact the Depoe Bay Whale Watching Center at 800-551-6949.
