Oregon Dunes

Restoration Collaborative

The Oregon Dunes Restoration Collaborative (ODRC) is a diverse partnership of key stakeholders and community members who care about the future of Oregon's dunes. The group includes people and organizations who care about the ecology, plants, wildlife, recreation and tourism the dunes support.

The Oregon dunes ecosystem is a unique, dynamic landscape, where movement of the sand by wind is critical to maintaining native ecology and historic recreation opportunities. In the last several decades, nonnative invasive plants have been rapidly stabilizing the dunes, closing in much of the open sand and altering natural geological and ecological processes. The general consensus, among recreation users, land managers, scientists and community members, is that action needs to be taken now to restore dunes function before they are entirely lost.

Rare plant communities and the threatened western snowy plover require open sand to survive, and it is the same open sand that brings many thousands of visitors to the area each year for the range of unique recreation opportunities it provides.

The ODRC has developed a strategy for restoring the dunes, which identifies key restoration goals and priority areas based on a set of criteria jointly developed with the Siuslaw National Forest. The broad strategy covers the entire restoration area, from north of Florence to Coos Bay. The goals focus on restoring landscape-scale processes, restoring smaller sites that are especially important for different reasons and preserving those areas that retain some of the natural ecology.

A new book has been released, "Restoring Oregon's Dunes: The bid to save a national treasure." Developed as a coffee-table-style book, Restoring Oregon's Dunes tells the story of the coastal dunes, their history, why they're disappearing and the partnership that has formed to try and save them. Along with the release of the book, the group has also launched a website, SaveOregonDunes.org, to promote public awareness and involvement in dunes restoration.
