Moving Safely During the Coronavirus Crisis

(NAPSI)—If you and your family plan to move soon, you'll be pleased to know that moving is considered an essential service.

If you and your family plan to move soon, you'll be pleased to know that moving is considered an essential service.

How professional movers go about that, however, varies from state to state and the manner and degree to which they're enforcing social distancing and permitting businesses to operate if they're considered essential.

So, if you or someone you know needs to move, the experts at the American Moving & Storage Association (AMSA) recommend you regularly check such resources such as the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention (CDC) to stay up-to-date on the latest news.

Smart Moves
To keep consumers and movers healthy and safe during the pandemic, AMSA offers these 10 moving-time facts and tips:

1. For the health of your family and moving crew, always follow CDC guidelines.

2. Work directly with your movers to determine the best time and method for your move.

3. The moving company you choose should alert you if there are any disruptions in service as a result of federal or state action.

4. Help your movers serve you in the safest way possible. Notify them ahead of time if anyone in your household may have contracted coronavirus, or may have been exposed to someone consultation.
