“That means being vigilant in adhering to best practices today and having to assume there will be little change in the near future,” said Hannigan. “But we are planning optimistically.”
According to Hannigan, around 1,900 of the 4,600 people employed in Florence rely on tourism-based employment, and tourism pumps about $147 million into Florence’s economy each year.

The average overnight visitor spends more than $150 per day while in town.
“The Florence Area Chamber of Commerce continues to work hard for member businesses and the community to continue promoting and advancing the cause of commerce and doing all we can to make Florence the best place to live, work, shop, eat, play, and stay — now, and as the crisis eventually passes,” Hannigan said.
