

THE ASTORIAN.

ASTORIA, OREGON: D. C. IRELAND, Editor. SATURDAY, JULY 3, 1873

OUR COUNTY ROADS.

It shall ever be our aim as a journalist to leave no effort unturned upon our part to awaken and foster a spirit that shall develop our resources and aid in building up our natural interests, and to that end we would invite the attention of our readers to a subject that we believe demands immediate action.

Now we have often heard the fallacious assertion "that when we get population we shall then be better able to and will then build roads." That is, we would, in the language of the factious, "Wilkins Micawber," "wait for something to turn up," but does it not behoove us to do something towards making it turn up.

We have not at present one single practicable wagon road leading out of Astoria, and yet, with comparative little outlay, we can open out the partial roads and trails leading to Young's River, and the fertile settlements on the Nehalem.

The overseers of San Francisco's asylum for the deaf, dumb, and blind, are being investigated for knocking down the boys and kissing the girls of the concern.

A schoolmaster of Bennington, Vermont, was lately worsted in a single combat by one of his pupils for presuming to interfere with the latter's courtship of a female classmate during school hours.

Georgia has a penitentiary convict who has served thirty-four years, and the other day, when they talked of turning him out into the cold world, he sat down and wept.

no where else employed on this coast. If the property owners, though whose lands the roads may lead, be unable to maintain them, let the expense be borne by the county.

The local history of those States, counties and districts where the most rapid progress has been made, indicate the fact that their public roads were ever a subject of earnest consideration.

We do not advise lavish expenditure, or an indulgence of theoretical experiments, but we do suggest a practical experiment of and action in a matter fraught with such moment to our best interest.

A Farmers' Warehouse.

The farmers of the Wallamet Valley can no longer say Astorians are not in favor of full and complete cooperation with them in the matter of making this the great depot for their products.

Table listing names and amounts: Col. James Taylor $500.00, Capt. J. H. D. Gray 500.00, G. W. Warren 500.00, James Welch 500.00, T. P. Poyers 500.00, Gen. John Adair 500.00, A. S. Meigs 250.00, M. S. Sessions 250.00, Joseph Horn 500.00, W. B. Headington 500.00, S. D. Adair 250.00, S. W. Raymond 150.00.

Total, $4,900.00. A committee was appointed to raise the balance of $1,100, making $6,000, besides donating the lots and blocks.

Now if the farmers intend to do anything legitimately, let them be about it. The above facts show that Astoria is awake, and it only remains to be seen whether the farmers really mean business or not.

DEATH OF JOSEPH G. WILSON.—Last evening we received the painful news that Hon. Joseph G. Wilson Representative to Congress from Oregon, died of paralysis in Marietta, Ohio, on the 2d inst. He had been suffering for some time with what was believed to be cancer in the stomach, but had very much improved the last week, and had accepted an invitation to address the Alumni at Marietta College of which institution he was a graduate.

Bennington, Vermont, has a horse forty-one years old.

Ben. Butler won't let reporters interview him any more, because they come into his presence with their pockets pinned up.

A New York post-office clerk who can't wear a diamond pin is looked upon as having neglected business.

The total number of Masons in New York is now upwards of 79,000; seventeen new lodges have been organized during the past year.

The overseers of San Francisco's asylum for the deaf, dumb, and blind, are being investigated for knocking down the boys and kissing the girls of the concern.

A schoolmaster of Bennington, Vermont, was lately worsted in a single combat by one of his pupils for presuming to interfere with the latter's courtship of a female classmate during school hours.

Georgia has a penitentiary convict who has served thirty-four years, and the other day, when they talked of turning him out into the cold world, he sat down and wept.

There is a sensible old lady in Kansas City who is determined to stand up for her rights and privileges. She happened to know something lately that a reporter wanted to know. He attempted to interview her and she held a revolver to his head and kept his mouth shut till a policeman came and took him away.

What rubbish it is for Darwin to talk about animals developing organs to meet the requirements of their position. Look at the cock, for instance. What was the use of his developing a comb when he didn't get any hair to use it upon?
