A DREAM.

[Written for the Tri-Weekly ASTORIAN].
Dear Mother! last night as I lay, on my bed,
I know that I was not asleep,
I was thinking of Johny, we mourn for as dead,
And, mother, I tried not to weep.
I thought of the bright happy hours gone by,
How joyous we were in our play;
And then the large tear drops would come in my eyes,
Though I tried hard to keep them away.

I thought of his voice, as he once used to speak,
His form, as he once used to be;
Then just at my side a sweet voice I could hear
Saying, "weep not, my sister, for me,"
I looked for the speaker, so clear every word
My chamber was filled with bright lights;
"Weep not, I am near thee," in clear tones I heard,
Although I am hid from your sight,

"Think not of the form you have laid neath
the sod,"

The body is nothing but clay;
Oh think of the land by the glad angels trod,
That never can vanish away.
That bright glorious world, free from sorrow
and pain,

Where angels are chainless and free,
And while you are mourning my absence in vain,
I'm waiting and watching o'er thee,

"I'm waiting dear sister, for loved ones to come
Where sickness and sorrow are o'er;
In a fair deathless heaven we'll all meet again
And part with our loved ones no more.
In one happy circle united we'll be,
And never again shed a tear;
Then weep not, my sister when thinking of me,
Remember, I'm watching o'er thee."

Then swift to my bosom came comfort and light
I knew that my brother was near;
I know that he lives, and is happier far,
Than ever he was with us here.

And when I am lonely, he'll come I am sure,
And whisper his sweet words of love,
And soon I will meet him, in that happy world,
The land of bright dreams above.
