The THE CHIEF JUDGESHIP.

A Washington dispatch of the 8th has this to say: The message of the President containing his nomination of George W. Williams for the judgeship of the Circuit Court is said to have been left at his own request. William's reign in office as Attorney-General, and his political influence, consequent upon his position, is that in another brief, common observation. Following is the letter of Attorney General to the Secretary of the Treasury, in which he is quoted:

"You were kind enough, without any dole or any advice on your part that I contemplated any such letter to you. I have since received from the Chief Justice of the Supreme Court of the United States. Since that time the bills of all, or nearly all, of the state. I have given my consent, I believe, that the stage of public confidence, unless it be to reach which further, and further, and further, until at last a perfect consciousness that I have performed with clear heads and upright purpose all duties of the various."
