Northern Pacific Coal Lands,

(Com. to The Astorian.) Some complaint has been made in consequence of reservations being made of coal in sales of railroad lands. There need be no hardship or misunderstanding in that matter, if people will be honest and candid at the time of making the purchases of such lands.

There is a recognzied distinction between the realty and the mineral to get away with an over-dose of ben- the realty. We can acquire ewnership in the one, without having any interest in the other.

All governments recognize a separate existence between property in the soil, and of its mineral deposits. The sale of one, does not necessarily carry Parties can purchase, or lease a mine, and acquire no title to the land, except the use of that portion which is necessary for mining and transporting purposes.

Sales are made of timber, with limited time, to run on the same, after which the rights of the purchaser to to the use of the land ceases.

No one would pretend that because he purchased a cow, that all her progeny must be included in the bill of the running trains. John has been a sale; here are probably several indefaithful servant and deserves promo- pendent existences, but not any more so than land, and its mineral deposits.

A want of candor in business transactions, frequently get people into unpleasantness. A vendor cannot be expected to insert a species of property (usually excepted), in the bond, that was not mentioned and bargained for,

If parties want to include coal mines in the purchase of land, let them walk up to the owner thereof, and candidly say so, and have it distinctly specified in the bond. While the laws of the United States in relation call from genial Dr. Reagles of Fort to pre-emption and homestead entries, exempt, and reserve all coal, etc., from the benefits of those entries, and recognizes coal as separate property. It ought to be respected and obeyed, and should be exforced, if violated, or else stricken from the statute.

The coal lands are not excepted from the railroad grant. In selling these lands the railroad company simply adopts the rule of the general government, in its disposition of the pub-
