ASTORIA, OREGON:

TUESDAY, APRIL 1, 1879

Dom Pedro of Brazil has given an eight-ton stone to the Washington monument; but the principal trouble with that structure just now is that it has been sinking under the weight it already has.

Our Washington Letter.

WASHINGTON, March 21.—"Abroad to see wonders, the traveller goes, and neglects the fine things which lie under his nose"—so said Pliny, so say we of this day.

In beauty, cleanliness, (one of beauties chief attributes by the way) broad streets, with its charming parks, so carefully kept, yet so perfectly accessible to "Uncle Sams" large family, also to his friends.

THE 22d OF FEBRUARY Was rushed in by the booming of cannon, which as one opened their eyes from the interrupted "forty winks" which are so delicious of a morning, gave the impression of the arrival of fourth of July, but the different temperature of an early February morning discovered the mistake.

THE CENTURY SAFE. The ceremony of closing to take place at noon to be opened only "a hundred years hence"—we, perchance, may not witness the opening which is to be hoped will prove more satisfactory than that of a box of cheese I remember to have witnessed when a child.

red years so well, that when the "Century safe" be opened, only "dust" will meet the gaze of our children's children. Throng of men, women and children were hurrying along to obtain the best places to witness the REVIEW OF THE FIRE DEPARTMENT.

We find the steps and all available space black with the mass of human beings. "Let's go up to the 'Dome,' such a nice place to see from," said one of our party, so away we sped up the winding stair, with landings every little while, where one may rest, then up, and on, until the best balcony is reached, when we rush out to find a crowd stretching their necks to see what is going on below, no room here up higher, feeling rather "Jack Beanstalkish" up we go, as high as visitors are permitted.

As the ceiling of the Rotunda is called, with upturned faces gazing at the superb decorations in fresco, representing a deification of Washington, with Freedom and Victory, while the thirteen female figures on the foreground represent the thirteen original states.

WONDERFUL WORK OF ART Amplely repays the energetic climber, but want of space, as well as of art knowledge, preventeth further description. A glance over the railing to the moving crowd on the floor of the Rotunda, dwarfed by the great distance, and the thought of the result of a fall to the marble floor, makes one draw back with a shudder.

THE OUTSIDE VIEW From the dome is the event of a life time. Clearly mapped out before you lies Washington, with her broad avenues, and intersecting streets, distinguished by letter and number, those running north and south are numbered, while those running east and west are lettered.

equal our own blue Columbia though, with the whitening sail, lies at our right, while in the blue distance chain of low wooded hills encircle the city north, east and west, thus forming a grand natural amphitheatre. But we must come down from the clouds of enjoyment which this fair prospect offers, and descend to every day life, take up its duties and trudge on.

Was a matter of wonder, intensified by the elegant and costly surroundings. Truly a democratic government. There were other and interesting events in honor of the day both here, and at Alexandria. The oldest inhabitants, together with the veterans of 1812, met at Willard's hall to listen to the "Farewell Address of Washington," read by a member, also a long but very good oration by Ben Perley Poore.

During the afternoon a cold sleet began to fall, which drove from the streets the pleasure seekers, who now found attractive the bright home fire, with loved and familiar faces, and your correspondent to her desk, to tell you in far away but still loved Oregon, all about February 22d 1879, as witnessed in Washington. M. O.

DIED. In Portland, March 30th, Thomas J. Dryer, in the 72d year of his age.
