John Sheridan Noticed.

If John Sheridan had been the possessor of a fiddle, a corn-cob pipe, or a sack of quartz specimens, he was, perhaps, among those who preferred saving his own collaterals to that of aiding helpless women or children, at the rescue of passengers from the ill-fated steamship Great Republic on the 19th. It is a waste of words to reply to his playful discourse in yesterday's Oregonian, one sentence of which reads as follows:

"As regards all other dispatches setting forth the liberality of the citizens of Astoria in throwing open hotels, residences, etc., it is a wicked lie, made to suit the whims of its citizens, the majority of whom live upon fishing, shipwrecks and plunder, as an occupation."

For the benefit of the Oregonian we may say that Mr. "John Sheridan, steerage passenger," is a base ingrate, and his words a malicious slander of "a majority" of the citizens of Astoria. We will not pretend to defend a mass of vandals here, who came to Oregon also, perhaps, in the steerage of a ship, flat broke.

Women Wanted Westward.

Commenting upon a correspondence from Walla Walla, published in THE ASTORIAN recently, the Boston Post says: "Emigration is not only a civilizing means, but a means of extending civilization. Fifteen thousand women from Massachusetts, or a hundred thousand from New England would do much for the elevation of society and the security of good morals, in the states where the balance is largely with the men. If the Home Missionary society should send them west, where they could all get married, it would do more for christian culture than in any other way; and if the tract society would devote its funds to putting them in western homes it would do better than sending printed tracts there. If we had a hundred daughters under our control we would land them all west of the Mississippi within one year." The New York Sun says that "marriage statistics for Massachusetts for 1877 reveal a state of society which is far from normal. There are too few marriages in proportion to population, and the consequence is seen in the widespread immorality for which the home of the Puritans is getting so unenviable a reputation." This is the first we have heard that the reputation of Massachusetts was bad. Nothing, however, is perfect, but we thought Massachusetts was as near that as possible; but our views appear to have been incorrect, and, now that women have ranged so far ahead of the men in numbers, we can conceive of no avowedly civilized means to overcome the disparity, unless it is by the basis proposed in the Post.

The Walla Walla Union says: It is understood that Dr. D. S. Baker now only owns one-seventh of the stock of the Walla Walla and Columbia river railroad company, the rest being the property of Messrs. Ainsworth, Ladd, Tilton, and their associates, who at the last meeting unanimously tendered Dr. Baker the presidency of the company and the management of its operations and extensions. Tendered as the presidency was by gentlemen who have had great experience in the construction and operation of means of transportation, it may be justly considered a high tribute to one who has devoted more time and money to providing a way to market for the surplus produce of this valley than all the rest of us.

The Walla Walla Statesman, referring to a melee in which an editor took part, expresses our sentiments exactly in the following verse: A soft answer turneth away wrath, and editors ought to be first to carry out the principles inculcated in that proverb. If there is anything we dislike it is fighting, and would rather apologize any time than do such things when we are in the wrong. We believe all other editors have the same feeling. The only difficulty is to make them believe they ever are wrong.

Receipt to Cure Scab in Sheep.

[WRITTEN FOR THE ASTORIAN.]

One pound of mercury or quicksilver, half ounce veris turpentine, two ounces spirits turpentine; work well together for six hours. Take four and a half pounds hogs lard, heat to temperature of new milk warm, add to first composition and stir till cold. If you wish a greater quantity add in proportion. It may be applied at any time the scab is discovered. The best time is when the sheep are sheared. Apply with a rag and rub it on all parts where the scab appears. My experience for three years convinces me that it is both a cure and preventive. It kills the germ left on the fence or log from the rubbing of the sheep, and saves the trouble and expense of the sheep dip every year.

DIED.

At Fort Canby, W. T. April 20th, 1879 James Fitz James, aged 50 years.

All old Nevadans will learn of his demise with deep regret, as he was a gentleman of noble and generous principles and a fast friend. May he rest in peace. Thus one by one the old forty-niners pass away to that undiscovered Land of the leaf where I hope we all may meet again.
