

The Daily Astorian.

ASTORIA, OREGON:

D. C. IRELAND, Editor.

FRIDAY, MAY 9, 1879.

—Two beautiful English girls, who in happier days practiced blacksmithing, have, in their poverty, started a blacksmiths' shop in Louisville, Ky., and they have plenty to do.

—The interior of the state, war and navy department building is being furnished in a style corresponding with its magnificent exterior. When completed it will be one of the finest public buildings in the world—perhaps the finest structure devoted to secular uses.

—There is no way to retire Judge Lynch but the uniform, rigorous enforcement of criminal laws. When the courts dispense equal and exact justice to all, and executives no longer abuse the pardoning power, public opinion will condemn and abrogate mob law. Until then the unlawful use of hemp will occasionally shock the sensibilities of order-loving people while reading an awful warning to the criminal classes.

—The full-length portrait of Martha Washington, painted by Mr. Andrews, is valuable from a purely artistic, as well as a historical standpoint. It hangs in the east room of the White house, near the portrait of Washington, and is of the same size. The impression is that of a lady of calm and dignified presence, in the dress of the period. It may be a matter of interest to people who believe that hands and faces have something to say to each other, to know that Mr. Andrews thinks so, too; that he has made a careful study of hands, and that not a little in the month of time spent on this picture was bestowed on them. The figure is in perfect drawing; good anatomy underlies its graceful contours; the flesh tints are warm, sympathetic and true; and in the skillful management of light and shadows, and the painting of texture, Mr. Andrews' technique shows the effect of study abroad, and of that French school of art to which we have learned to look for good portraiture. This is the sort of work that in Paris goes to the Salon, and in which here is hope for the future of American art. The effect of the whole is thoroughly artistic and satisfying, and it is pleasant to find a historical picture done by the best methods of the best art.

Youthful Shepherds.

Cour. American Agriculturist.

One pleasant day we rode twenty miles over the Laramie plains, from Laramie city to the Little Laramie river, where we found a prosperous sheep raiser from Nebraska, named Farrell. There were no neighbors for miles around with the exception of Motley, the historian, who had left his father's pleasant home, near Boston, Mass., and located a sheep rancho close by here. The Farrells gave us a most hospitable reception, inasmuch as one of our party was Mr. Weston, the auditor of the state of Nebraska. Furthermore they had long been subscribers to the American Agriculturist, and the last number lying on the table was not an unpleasant reminder of home on these far-away plains. We bade them good-bye late in the afternoon, turned off to the right of Sheep Mountain, entering a narrow plain between high ranges of hills, spurred forward our jaded animal, until the gathering shadows warned us that we could not proceed any further with safety. At daybreak we spied a large flock of sheep in a corral close by a rude cabin or dugout, in which were two boys, sons of Mr. Farrell. Here twelve miles or more from home, they had been tending a flock of twenty-three hundred sheep during the entire season. They shot their game with an old rifle, did their own cooking, and lived entirely alone with their dogs and two ponies employed in herding sheep, which were driven into a corral every night, as a protection against bears, wolves, and wild animals. An antelope which one of them had shot the day previous, was suspended near the door of the cabin. There was a good range here, and the father had in the spring-time, sent the sheep and the boys to possess it. You will be surprised when I tell you that these two lads entrusted with the care of over two thousand sheep, and living here in this remote, secluded spot, were only eleven and thirteen years of age. It is astonishing, the early self-reliance which these frontier children display, the skill which, as mere urchins, they attain in herding sheep.

—Keep your blood pure and your health must be good, the great purifier is Pfunder's Oregon Blood Purifier. All Astoria druggists have it now.

—Your complexion is sallow, and skin yellow, your liver is affected. Obtain from your druggist a bottle of Pfunder's Oregon Blood Purifier.

—J. C. Johnson may be found at the Occident in Astoria every Monday, Wednesday, and Friday evening, ready to attend to messenger duty in Portland or to points along the river in a satisfactory manner.
