-- The musical society on Monday evening held a business meeting at which much important business was transacted. A new constitution was presented and adopted by the society, placing the same on a more permanent basis than formerly, and making several changes on the old society not the least of which was altering the name from the Handel and Haydn society of Astoria, to the Astoria Musical society, by which the new society will now be known, as it was thought by several members that the old name had a slight appearance of aping some of the similar societies in other cities. Besides this several other changes were made in the management etc. The officers elected being the same as in the old society, with the addition of two directors.
