Klaskanine creek has more beautiful holes, below more lovely riffles, to fish in, than any other creek in these parts in which we have fished; but there are several creeks to hear from.

Eaton's hat has actually turned black since his visit to Klaskanine creek. The bottom of the creek was literally black with suckers (no trout); but then, we never before heard of suckers affecting a man's head gear in that way.

Watson Bros. have taken off twenty-one of their boats; Booth & Co. have nearly closed up, and all of J. G. Megler & Co.'s boats have been hauled off. The season of 1879 will be known hereafter as the "short season" all around.

The steamship Oregon took on board 3,300 cases of fish at Eureka yesterday, which necessitated her laying over at Astoria last night, as the California got in first from San Francisco, and there was not room enough at that dock for both steamers to load at one time.

A telegram has been received in Portland from California requesting the detention of young Hodgson, arrested on charge of arson. The prisoner and a comrade are accused of setting fire to a wine cellar in Santa Rosa. There is a reward of $300 for the apprehension and conviction of the incendiaries. An officer with a requisition from the governor of California arrived yesterday.

Wreck of the Pinafore.

The San Francisco Chronicle of Friday informs us of the wreck of H. M. S. Pinafore at the Grand Opera House, Thursday evening, when the crew and audience were dispersed in short order, only $40 in the house, and $224 to pay being the rock upon which she split. Is it possible that the saucy ship will never sail over the boards of our Metropolitan Hardy ever, shall we listen to the echoes of—

"We sail the ocean blue; never! We admit that we sorrowfully read in the Chronicle the fate of the Pinafore, but if we must repudiate the now popular phrase "what, never," etc., without having listened to the play, we can congratulate us that we have not been punished which the monopoly like one of our brother editors in the east, of whom it is said that, a few days ago he called his sub-editors together, and telling them "this thing is getting monotonous, and must be stopped; to day's edition had that abominable Pinafore gag a dozen times repeated, and I wish never to see it again." And the response, as one man was. "What, never!"

That the composers have received little or no compensation for their work, in America, is well known. Apropos of this subject, Mr. Sullivan, in a recent letter to a friend in New York, says: "I am beyond measure gratified at Pinafore's success in America; but there is one matter of great regret to me. Not the money question; for although I don't for an instant pretend to assert that I should not prefer to be paid for my work, still my income is sufficiently large for me to feel that payment in this matter is a secondary consideration." He then proceeds, at some length, to state his grievance, which is a purely musical one, namely: that we do not use the score as he wrote it. It is a thoroughly artistic view of the matter. If we have nothing more substantial to offer let us give three cheers and one cheer more For the bright composers of the Pinafore.

Tillamook Rock Prospected.

On Sunday morning at 3 o'clock the United States steamer Thomas Corwin, left the city for Tillamook rock, and Capt. Braun informs us that they made a successful landing, and explored the rock, which they found to be 320 feet from low water to low water mark or about 300 feet at high water, east and west, by 224 feet at low water, or about 200 feet at high water north and south. The principal rock is 95 feet high, and has a flat surface of about 40 by 70 feet on top, with a gradual slope to the main shore. The edge is very abrupt at the point at which the landing was made, and Capt. Braun is of the opinion that all the supplies can be readily landed there for the construction of the proposed light-house and for use after the same is built, as the water is deep, and no danger need be feared of sunken rocks to sink a vessel in the swell. The rock (or island) was found to be inhabited by numerous large sea-lions, which appeared perfectly "at home," and refused to budge for the incroaching civilization, as the older ones had their young with them.

The landing at the rock was made easier than the debarkation. By stepping lively the men were enabled to get on to the rock between swells, but when it came to leaving the rock it was quite another thing. The strong under-tow, and the sweep of the sea around the base of the rock made it so difficult that the men were obliged to jump into the sea, after fastening a line around themselves, and were then drawn on board the boat. By placing a heavy anchor off from the rock and fastening ring bolts into the rock, then erecting a derrick, comparatively easy landings may be made of materials.
