

The Daily Astorian.

ASTORIA, OREGON: FRIDAY, MARCH 4, 1881. D. C. IRELAND, Editor.

The General Outlook.

Dalles Mountaineer.

It is becoming evident that railroad building in the Pacific northwest will be on a grander scale during the present year than ever contemplated even by the most sanguine.

Several roads are to be constructed during 1881 in eastern Oregon, opening up sections of rich agricultural and mineral lands to settlement and furnishing employment to thousands of men.

With the construction and completion of these lines it is easily to be seen that our city will derive much benefit. In all of them our city is an objective point.

position of more than one Pacific city and from the indications observable The Dalles need feel no alarm at the prospect ahead.

The changes of the next decade will be astonishing to every one. The commencement of the Columbia river will be extensive enough to keep a large fleet of river vessels employed constantly between Astoria and The Dalles.

The Area of Texas.

Texas, with an area of more than 274,000 square miles, has a great variety of soils, but until recently but little has been known of the country between the Brazos and Rio Grande and north of the thirty-first parallel of latitude.

The Grain Crop of Kansas.

The land commissioner of the Kansas division of the Union Pacific railroad has just received interesting reports on the condition of the winter grain crop along the line of the Kansas division.

There is not now any better news paper, nor one more consistently devoted to the building up of the country than THE ASTORIAN.
