

The Daily Astorian. ASTORIA, OREGON: WEDNESDAY, JUNE 15, 1881. D. C. IRELAND, Editor.

"So Say We All of Us." One of that class of writers continually talking of what has been, takes the ground in a Portland print that Portland must and will continue to be what it has been. He says:

Portland has the Willamet valley to sustain her, and that is no small support. All the connections of the Oregon Railway and Navigation company with eastern Oregon and Washington will center their trade here. Until the Cascade branch of the Northern Pacific is completed, the trade of the northern counties of eastern Washington must come here, and whether they cease to come here will depend very much upon the inducements Portland merchants shall hold out to retain their trade. To suppose that Portland merchants will ever be so dull as to allow trade to leave them that they have once had, is to suppose that they will fail to deserve success.

Very many fine schemes have been permitted to sleep the sleep that knows no waking, from the very cause supposed in the concluding portions of the above paragraph. A portion of the plan for Portland's future policy is thus outlined:

What Portland should do, is to study the interests of the whole region and then work to help all outside interests. Complaint of selfishness is made against every metropolis, and our citizens should see to it that no such complaint shall be well founded. Let the people of the whole country see that the city realizes the needs of the country and identifies itself with those needs, and it will disarm jealousy and make the city doubly strong. Portland has no natural rival for future pre-eminence, for the Columbia river is the natural highway for trade. If it is least expensive to the producer to have his products taken direct from the Cascades to Astoria, why not? Portland merchants can control all avenues of trade, and while Astoria cannot become a trade rival, it can be made a shipping point to the advantage of all. The future of Portland can be made whatever its citizens desire and the growth of the region requires. The field is broad; the future certain. A liberal policy and thoughtful provision for the needs of commerce, to tax products lightly and encourage production as far as possible, will do much to ensure such a future as our merchants hope for.

Thankful for the crumbs of comfort thrown to Astoria, we recognize that there is some sense and reason in that argument. Nothing can be fairer; but as it seems to be in continuation of THE ASTORIAN'S argument of years past, we hope our friends at the metropolis will read it with wisdom and act accordingly. If somebody were to come along and knock that prop of the Willamet valley out from under Portland, and let it fall into the lap of Astoria; and direct shipments from The Dalles to Astoria were to continue, it would be both a liberal and a thoughtful policy for the advancement and encouragement of commerce and production of the country, as it would assuredly be the least expensive for the producer of the valley, as well as the producer of eastern Oregon, to have his products taken direct to Astoria; why not? "So say we all of us."

A hurricane struck near Wells, on Monday. An old couple named Chaffee, were killed, several houses wrecked and several persons severely hurt.

A telegram states that a hundred persons were killed and six injured by an earthquake which recently devastated a number of villages in the passale of Van, Armenia, Turkey.

The cyclone in Kansas was first seen near Nimitah, on the Arkansas river, and traveled rapidly in a northeasterly direction, passing Mulvane. During the storm large hail stones fell in immense quantities, and a hot wind prevailed, making it difficult to breathe, and turning the leaves of corn as black as dirt. After leaving Mulvane the cyclone wheeled off in a southerly direction and struck Floral, a small town about four miles from Seeley. One person was killed there, and two more or less dangerously wounded. Crops are much injured.

—S. Danziger, San Francisco clothing store, has the largest and best selected stock of clothing in the city. Also, gents furnishing goods, boots and shoes, trunks and valises, hats and caps.

In Bad Taste. We shall always feel that it has been bad taste and unwise for one faction of a great party to exult over another faction, as the half-breeds of New York did over the confirmation of Robertson; for there comes a time when victory over the common enemy is only possible by unity and harmony of all factions. He is not a wise leader who seeks to antagonize these factions. What we may have said with respect to that faction of the press which holds only the offal of the party up to view, is true and we fully concur with this view from the San Jose Mercury, which says:

The wholesale denunciation of Conkling and Platt, by republican journals, is not exactly the right way, it seems to us, to heal the breach in the republican ranks, or to gain votes for the party. Conkling represents the stalwart wing of the party,—that is, republicans who have been true to the colors of their party through good and evil report. There are hundreds of thousands of such republicans in the nation who admire the stalwart statesman from New York, Robertson, who had to be rewarded for the part he took in securing the nomination of Garfield, supported the Democratic nominee for the presidency no longer ago than 1872. To give over the New York custom-house with all its vast patronage, to Conkling's political enemy, and that too after exalting Blaine, another of Conkling's enemies, to the premiership; and to do this thing, too, knowing that it would humiliate Conkling; and doubtless for that very object, was about the roughest piece of business of which a republican president could be guilty. What astonishes us is that republicans should stand in and defend the president in this matter. The appointment of Robertson was not a necessary act on the part of the president, either to establish his supremacy or to reward his friends. And certainly the removal of Merritt was not made in the interest of civil-service. This idea that the president can do no wrong, is stupendous nonsense. And we reiterate: The exaltation of the friends of Garfield over the supposed annihilation of Conkling is not wise, to say the least. Besides, they will be apt to find Conkling a pretty lively sort of a corpse, before he retires to the seclusion of his political grave.

—Mr. John Rogers of the Central Market, has made arrangements to keep all the finest fresh fish, etc., in their season.
