The National Horror.

Statement from Secretary Blaine.
The president went Saturday morning to the Baltimore and Potomac station at about twenty minutes past nine, intending, with a portion of his cabinet, to leave on the limited express for New York. I rode in the carriage with him from the executive mansion and was walking by his side when he was shot. The assassin was immediately arrested, and the president was conveyed to a private room in the station building, and surgical aid at once summoned. The surgeons regard his wounds as very serious, though not necessarily fatal, as his vigorous health gives strong hopes for his recovery. He has not lost consciousness for a moment.

Statement of an Eye Witness.

A gentleman who was an eye witness of the attempted assassination gives the following statement of the occurrence: "I was coming down Pennsylvania avenue when I saw a carriage coming up the avenue, the horses running so fast that I thought they were running away. As the carriage arrived in front of me a man put his head out of the window and said: 'Faster.' After hearing this remark I thought there was something wrong, and ran after the carriage. When it reached the depot the man jumped out and entered the ladies' room. He had not been there more than three minutes when President Garfield arrived, stepped out of his carriage and entered the ladies' room. The president, after passing through the door, was just turning the corner of a seat when the assassin, who was standing on the left of the door, fired. The ball struck the president in the back, and he fell forward. I ran to the depot, and just then the man fired again while the president was falling. The moment the president fell, a policeman who was standing at the depot door keeping the way clear for the president and his party, grabbed the assassin by the neck and as he pulled him out of the depot another policeman came to his assistance. Just after firing the shot the assassin exclaimed, 'I have killed Garfield. Arthur is president. I am a stalwart.' While the president was lying on the floor in the ladies' room, he was surrounded by secretaries Windom, James and Blaine. Mrs. Hunt, Miss Windom and Mrs. James were also standing near the president. In three or five minutes after the shooting Dr. Bliss arrived. The president was then put on a bed and carried up stairs, where an examination was made by the doctors. General Sherman then came and called an ambulance to carry the president to the White-house. A spectator thus describes the removal of the president to the White-house: "The president lay in the ambulance propped up with pillows and with his right arm thrown over his head. His face was ashy white but bore a calm placid look. He seemed perfectly conscious and opened his eyes frequently to view the surroundings. While he was being carried up the stair he smiled sadly and waived his hand in recognition of friends who were gathered about him. His sufferings must have been intense but he gave no sign of it, and was gentle and submissive as a child."

The Voice of the Press.

The London Observer printed a special edition Sunday morning. It says: The first impression is that the dastardly act is due to the same agencies as have attempted the lives of so many crowned heads, but there is no evidence of political crime. It seems to have been the act of a half-crazed lunatic. Regicide is an intelligible crime, but to kill one president to make room for another is an act of folly that no sane man would perform.

The New York Post says:

"Exclamations which the assailant of President Garfield is reported to have made immediately after the deed, and which seemed to indicate political motives on his part may well be taken for symptoms of insanity. It is hardly necessary to add that this event has given a shock to the minds and hearts of the American people only less grievous than that caused by the assassination of President Lincoln, not only by reason of President Garfield's personal popularity, but because every good citizen feels such occurrences to be national misfortune and disgrace, and because no one, to whatever party he may belong, can close his eyes to the political confusion which must ensue from such a change of the administration as would follow his death.

The New York Express said: The attempted assassination of the president this morning shocked the country beyond measure. The act was so dastardly and diabolical that friend and foe alike are outraged by it. There is only one party in America, in view of such a crime as this; the country is not large enough for political assassins to live in. In the breasts of fifty millions of people there is but one sentiment in the United States today of loyalty to the republic and shame and indignation that it has been assailed in the person of the president.

The mayor of New York had the flags at half mast early, but took them down when he learned the president was not dead.

A reporter called at the Fifth Avenue hotel Saturday morning about an hour after the reception of the first dispatch and sent his card to the rooms of Vice President Arthur and Senator Conkling. Word was immediately returned that the subject of the president's assassination was too serious a subject to be talked of in a moment, and neither would be seen under any circumstances. The reporter saw Conkling in the hallway near his room a few minutes after and when asked his opinion of the shooting begged to be excused. He said: "The news has found me so unprepared and overwhelmed with personal cares that it has almost stunned me. May God grant that it may not be true. It is the most terrible incident in our history since that of Lincoln's assassination, but if it is true may heaven help the country." Conkling then turned away and went to his room.

A Sad and Touching Scene.

Just before Mrs. Garfield's arrival and while she was expected, Secretary Robert Lincoln was pacing the floor of the Presidents library with a downcast air, evidently recalling the scene of the sad tragedy of sixteen years ago. As the hour approached at which Mrs. Garfield was expected a sorrowful group gathered on the south portico of the White-house to receive her. A few minutes before seven o'clock she arrived and was met at the front door by Attorney General MacVeagh, Mrs. P. M. Gen. James and Mrs. Garfield's oldest son. Her son placed his arm about her waist and led her into the house sobbing. Strong men who witnessed this sad scene coming turned away and wept as they heard the heartbroken sobs of the President's wife. Mrs. Garfield was immediately taken to the bedside of her husband who quitted her with affectionate cheerfulness. The scene that followed was indescribable. The presence of Mrs. Garfield seemed to cheer her husband and the favorable turn in his condition observed within an hour after her arrival was attributed by the physicians to that fact. The president's pulse, which had been for some time at 140 run down to 128, and soon afterwards to 112. At 9:40 he was sleeping quietly and Mrs. Garfield felt considerably encouraged, although physicians shook their heads and maintained the opinion that the case was hopeless.

Blaine to Arthur.

WASHINGTON, July 2. Hon. C. A. Arthur, Vice-President, New York:
At this hour, I, P. M., the president's symptoms are not regarded unfavorable, but no definite assurance can be given until after Peruvian Bitters.

Chester's Balm.
The Count Caceres, the Spanish Viceroy in Peru in 1820. The Countess, his wife, was prostrated by an intermittent fever, from which she was freed by the use of Peruvian Bitters. The Peruvian bark, or, as it was called in the language of the country, "Quinquina." Grateful for her recovery, on her return to Europe in 1822, she introduced the remedy in Spain, where it was known under various names, until Linnaeus called it Cinchona in honor of the lady who had brought them that which was more precious than the gold of the Incas. To this day, after a lapse of two hundred and fifty years, science has given us nothing to take its place. It effectually cures a morbid appetite for stimulants, by restoring the natural tone of the stomach. It attracts excessive love of liquor as it does a fever, and destroys both alike. The powerful tonic virtue of the Cinchona is preserved in the Peruvian Bitters, which are as effective against malarial fever to-day as they were in the days of the old Spanish bark. It attracts the ingrates, the agents of these bitters to be absolutely pure, and of the best known quality. A trial will satisfy you that this is the best bitter in the world. "The proof of the pudding is in the eating," and we willingly abide this test. For sale by all druggists, grocers and liquor dealers. Order it.

In the White House of Medicine.

No preparation has ever performed such marvelous cures, or maintained so long a reputation, as Ayer's Cherry Pectorant, which is recognized as the world's remedy for all diseases of the throat and lungs. Its long-continued use has made it universally known as a safe and reliable agent to employ. Against ordinary colds, which are the forerunners of more serious affections, it acts speedily and surely, always relieving suffering, and often saving life. The protection it affords, by its timely use in the throat and chest, makes it an invaluable remedy to be kept always on hand in every home. No person can afford to be without it, and, once used, they never will use it again. From their knowledge of its composition and effects, physicians use the CHERRY PECTORANT extensively in their practice, and, as a recommendation, it is absolutely certain in its remedial effects, and will always cure where cures are possible.

FOR SALE BY ALL DEALERS.

Mothers! Mothers!! Mothers!!!

Are you disturbed at night and broken of your rest by a sick child suffering and crying with the excruciating pain of cutting teeth? If so, go at once and get a bottle of Mrs. Winslow's Soothing Syrup. It will relieve the poor little sufferer immediately—depend upon it; there is no mistake about it. It is a healthy and natural remedy, and it is used by a mother on earth who has ever used it, who will not tell you at once that it will regulate the bowels, and give to the child a healthy and happy health to the child, operating like magic. It is perfectly safe to use in all cases, and pleasant to the taste, and is the preparation of one of the oldest and best female physicians and nurses in the United States. Sold everywhere. 25 cents a bottle.

The Human Hair, How to Preserve and Beautify It.

Many persons abuse this delicate and beautiful ornament by burning it with alcoholic washes and plastering it with grease. They are the most injurious to the hair, and it is not absorbed. Burnett's Co. Coine, a compound of coconut oil, etc., is unrivaled as a dressing for the hair—its use will prevent the hair from becoming thin, and it is especially adapted to its various conditions, preventing its falling out and promoting its healthy growth. Housekeepers should insist upon obtaining Burnett's Flavoring Extracts, for they are the best.
