

The Daily Astorian

ASTORIA, OREGON: FRIDAY, JULY 8, 1882. D. C. IRELAND, Editor.

Latest news from Washington indicates still more hopeful condition of the President. Surgeon General Barnes, heretofore skeptical, now admits the probability of a happy result.

The Portland Daily Standard has been sold to T. A. Sutherland and C. J. Christie. Mr. Nolter will continue the Weekly Standard.

A Los Angeles paper notes the arrival there of quite a number of immigrants from France this year. A good class of settlers for southern California.

Boston is going ahead with her project for a world's fair in 1885. R. M. Pulsifer, of the Herald, is to be the chairman of the executive committee.

There are now over a hundred inmates in the hospital for the insane at Steilacoom and an increase of the number of wardens will soon be required.

Portland has been having a religious upheaval, under the ministrations of Rev. Mr. Hallenback, an enthusiastic and very successful young revivalist.

Gov. Newell, of Washington territory, actuated by a desire to retrench government expenses and escape the dust and heat incident to the bricks and mortar of a city, has removed the executive office to the capitol building, Olympia.

The world seems to have suddenly loosened its crazy pieces. Three have been arrested in Washington within a few days, two of whom were armed. One said he had come to kill Blaine, the other said he had a revelation to kill Arthur.

In the Star route cases when congress passed the appropriations for the expedited routes, it relieved the officials from legal responsibility. The courts cannot inquire into the acts of officials after congress, by special legislation, has given them its approval.

There has been a sharp advance in the price of lumber in San Francisco. The increased demand from Mexico, South America, China and Japan, has accelerated building material. Lumber which last year sold for $18 per thousand is now quoted at $25, and that which sold for $27, now rates at $33 and $35.

Sir Joshua Mason, who died in England recently, began life as a street-lawyer. He afterward became a great steel-pen manufacturer. He was almost entirely self-educated. In 1860 he established an orphanage, where 500 children were gratuitously clothed, fed and educated. He expended $300,000 upon the foundation of this institution. He was knighted in 1872 for his munificence. In 1880 he endowed the Mason science college to the amount of nearly a quarter of a million pounds sterling.

Twenty million pounds of oleomargarine were made in New York during 1880. Almost anything in the form of tallow can be worked up. Most of it is supposed to go to Europe, though considerable is disposed of in this country. The dairy interest has been already injured to the extent of a third of its value, and the possibilities of the production of oleomargarine are immense, much exceeding those of genuine butter. The states should compel the impure article to go under its own name, and not allow it to be sold as butter.

The Seattle Post, referring to the visit of Prof. Hilgard, says that in company with a number of scientists he is making an extended geological survey of the mineral and coal bearing district of Washington territory west of the Cascade range, giving special study and investigation to that part of the district lying in the immediate vicinity of Puyallup valley and Carbon hill. The professor has been happily facilitated in his expedition through the kindness of the Oregon Railway and Navigation company, and as these rich fields are known to be interesting chapters in the great book of nature, it is hoped our learned visitors will favor the public with the result of their labors.

Unhappy Brazil.

Dom Pedro, of Brazil, a few years ago extended his journey to this country and portions of Europe in search of information. Recently he has been devoting his leisure time to studying the affairs of his own empire. He made a trip through the provinces of Parana and Minas Geraes. What he saw could not have been consoling to his national pride, nor near so entertaining as the spectacles he witnessed abroad. The Rio News reminds him of this, frankly but sadly. It says: Let the provinces be contrasted with their condition forty years ago when Dom Pedro ascended the throne. The News then adds:

He must have everywhere seen deserted villages, crumbling walls and grass-grown streets, the ruins of a prosperous era which has been succeeded by apathy, stagnation and decay during forty years of profound peace. This period has, it is true, seen the population double, and foreign commerce increase nearly twenty-fold. It has seen railroads and telegraphs constructed, and a few leading cities enter upon the possession of all the benefits of a high civilization. But at the same time industry has been narrowed into a very few channels; foreign commerce has passed into the hands of strangers who absorb the profits, and neither the political position of the Nation nor the Emperor's personal renown can obscure the manifold signs of industrial decadence.

The News assigns causes for this decadence in what follows: The blight of slavery rests upon the productive industries of the entire Nation, and it must be removed. The wasteful and repressive system of bureaucratic government, centering in the imperial capital, weighs upon the political and industrial development of the whole empire, and it also must be changed. Many opportunities have been lost in these 40 years to reform these evils and to build up this empire on a more substantial and lasting foundation, and the empire has undoubtedly lost many an opportunity to take a higher rank among the nations of the world. The evils have now outgrown any casual opportunity to crush them, and their results are apparent to every eye. It is not any easy task to retrace one's steps and to begin one's work anew, but from that there is now no alternative.

Brazilians should copy from Mexico, and make a bid for American enterprise and capital to open up their country. It has many advantages to offer, but they must be offered in such a way as to become an inducement. When the emperor and his people come to a realizing sense of this fact, they will act upon the suggestion, and have the satisfaction of seeing Brazil enter at once upon a new career of prosperity.

Star Route Pruning.

Is Postmaster-Gen. James pursuing a wise policy? We hope so, says the Alta, but we confess that sometimes we are inclined to think that he is allured into too much pruning by the hope of winning fame as a reformer. He is showing how much money he is saving to the government, but he must also show that it is a genuine saving, not a mere withholding of service. We find in some of our exchanges certain complaints about his economical work, the truth of which deserves inquiry. It is not well to sing too loudly the praises of this system of reduction, until all sides are heard from. If it be true that it is founded on a plan of depriving border settlements of adequate mails, it is unwise and unjust. If this be not true, we will all join in Mr. James' praise. The Alta says:

All good citizens will rejoice over all the economies that the Postmaster-general is able to introduce into the administration of the postal service, provided that the items of expense which he may cut off are really in excess of the needs of the country. If he can make the service self-sustaining without depriving any of the settlements of reasonable accommodations, he will deserve high commendation. It is very questionable, however, whether any man can do this. Any pruning of mail contracts which will lessen the efficiency of the service is objectionable, and, if attempted, should be prevented by congress as soon as the new session begins. The government has no right to expect all the border routes to pay expenses. The sparsely-settled territories have a right to adequate mail service, and must not be deprived of it in order to make a reputation for anybody as an economizer. If there has been any fraud in mail contracts on Star or other routes, try the guilty parties and send them to prison. If routes have been improperly extended, remedy the wrong; but do this carefully, and make no blunders, and impose no hardships on the border settlers. While the Postmaster-General is about his business, let him also inquire whether there has not been needless waste of public money in sustaining fast mail service between New York and other cities, for the purpose of gaining a few hours in the delivery of letters and papers. The country at large does not desire to pay for such luxuries. If there is money to throw away, expend it on extending the service in the far west.

Gen. Judson Kilpatrick has sailed for Valparaiso, to enter on his duties as Minister to Chile.

Shanghai has a scheme for an International exhibition in 1882 under consideration. World's fairs will soon be so common as to be a nuisance.

A remnant of Victorio's murderous band of Apaches have massacred a party of surveyors on the line of the Mexican Central railway, forty miles south of El Paso.

The Fourth of July was celebrated with much spirit in Victoria. The news of the improvement in the condition of President Garfield caused great satisfaction.

That they have hoodlums in China was shown by an attack upon the house of an American missionary in Peking recently. The rowdies were dispersed by Chinese troops and the ring leader arrested. Such demonstrations, however, are rare in the Flowery Kingdom.
