

The Daily Astorian.

ASTORIA, OREGON: THURSDAY, OCT. 6, 1881. J. F. HALLORAN, Editor.

Wrangel Land.

Under date of August 16th, John Muir, the celebrated scientist of this coast, writes from the Corwin of Point Barrow, that this new territory had been taken formal possession of in the name of the United States. This mysterious country has long been a problem to geographers. Sixty years ago, Admiral Wrangel, of the Russian navy, cruised an entire summer looking for that icy continent, but unsuccessfully. In 1849, Keller, a German navigator, saw the land but could not get to it, but now since Capt. Hooper has succeeded in effecting a landing, it may be considered a part of our domain, though what practical good it is, would be hard to say. The landing was effected in latitude 71 degrees; longitude 178 degrees. No trace of the Jeannette was found, nor of any human inhabitant. The beach was well tracked with polar bears, but none of the party could discover any sign of reindeer or musk oxen, though the country seems to abound in the kind of food they require. A single fox track was observed, and some of the burrows of a species of marmot, also a few birds and about twenty species of plants, most of them in bloom. The rock is clay slate, which weathers smoothly, and is covered with a sparse growth of mosses, lichens and flowering plants, not unlike that of the adjacent coasts of Siberia and Alaska.

If anything pleasing could be said to have marked the sad rites witnessed throughout the United States on the 26th ult., it was the mournful intermingling of the Hancock and English and Garfield and Arthur clubs in many cities, in their uniforms as they appeared in the stirring campaign. Such magnanimity on the part of the political opponents of the dead President goes far toward taking the sting out of politics. It shows in a strong and suggestive light the beauty of our political system, whose party antagonism finds no expression in the death of a President. It signifies that the President is the chief executive of the whole people, and not of any party or faction thereof. From the moment our President fell before the assassin's pistol to the end of the mournful ceremonies that consigned his mortal remains to the tomb, the commiseration and sympathy of the democratic party was as unfeeling and genuine as if it had been a President of their choice, and not Garfield, who had fallen. This is well. Its influence over both of the great political parties of the nation will be most salutary. It will teach us that hardest of all lessons to learn—charity.

By this time it is pretty well established that Arthur will reorganize the cabinet to suit himself at least; for it is evident that if he has no enemies to punish, he at least, has some friends that he wants to reward. The cabinet of a deceased President, in accordance with an invariable etiquette, unite in tendering their resignations to the incoming President, and it has been the uniform rule for the new President to decline these resignations, at least for a season; but a reorganization of the cabinet has so far always followed the accession of a Vice President, rarely or never on cordial terms with the advisers of his predecessor.

WASHINGTON TERRITORY will ask for admission as a state next winter, so will New Mexico, and the inhabitants of Southern Dakota are in hopes that they will be segregated and admitted into the Union. Our sister territory stands the best chance. New Mexico is not inhabited by the class of people most desirable for American citizens, and Dakota must probably wait till it has a few more people.

The World's History a Poem.

The world's history is a divine poem, of which the history of every nation is a canto and every man a word. Its strains have been pealing along down the centuries, and though there may have been mingled the discords of warring cannon and dying men, yet to the Christian philosopher and historian—the humble listener—there has been a divine melody running through the song, which speaks of hope and halcyon days to come.—Jas. A. Garfield.
