THE MUTILATED CURRENCY QUESTION.

"I can't take that nickle," said a horse-car conductor to a man who got in at the City Hall.

"What was de matter mid dot goin'?" asked the passenger, blandly.

"It's no good. It's got a hole in it," replied the conductor, gruffly.

"Ish dot so? Off you place you show me dot holes."

"Look at it. We can't take any such money as that."

"Oxuse me," smiled the passenger, and he handed over a dime.

"That's worse yet," growled the conductor.

"Vos dot dime full of holes, too?" asked the passenger, looking up innocently.

"Here's a whole side chipped out. We ain't allowed to take mutilated money," and the conductor handed it back.

"So?" inquired the passenger.

"Haf you got changes for bluf a tollar?" and he passed over another coin.

"What's this?" asked the conductor, contemptuously. "It's as bald as a deacon. There ain't a scratch on it to show whether it's an overcoat button or a skating rink. Haven't you got any money?"

"Vell, I should make smiles!" said the passenger, good-humoredly.

"Here is five tollar, and you can baste it together ven you got some leasures. Haf you got changes off dot five tollars?" and he handed over a bill torn in four or eight pieces.

"I don't want no more fooling," said the conductor. "If you can't pay your fare, get off."

"Vell, don't make so many droubles. I vill bay you," and he pulled out a Mexican quarter.

"Gif me bennies," he suggested.

"Look here, are you going to pay your fare, or not?"

"Off gource. May be you vas vating for dat money," and he took back his quarter and substituted an English sixpence.

"Now you get off this car," roared the conductor.

"Vere has dese cars got by?" asked the passenger, rising to obey.

"Fulton Ferry," said the conductor.

"Den I may as vell got owt. You dell dem companies dot some dimes de make more money as odder dimes off dey dook voteffer dey got insted of going mitout nodings, don't it?"

And the smiling passenger, having ridden to the end of the line, crossed the ferry, observing to himself: "Dot vas petter off I safe such money, and some dimes I go owt to East Nyarick und it don't goss me no more as nodding at all."—Brooklyn Eagle.

Sanitary Suggestions.

It is easier to keep one's health than to regain it when once lost. And yet on this point how careless and negligent some people are. Here are a few rules which will commend themselves to every one's common sense, and need but to be recalled to be more generally observed. Never lean with the back upon anything that is cold. Never begin a journey till the breakfast has been eaten. Never take warm drinks and then immediately go out into the cold air. Keep the back, especially between the shoulder blades, well covered, and the chest also well protected. In sleeping in a cold room, establish the habit of breathing through the nose, and never with the mouth open. Never go to bed with cold or damp feet; always warm by a fire ten or fifteen minutes before going to bed. After exercise of any kind never ride in an open carriage or near the window of a car for a moment, for it is dangerous to health and even to life. When hoarse, speak as little as possible till it is recovered from, as the voice may be permanently lost, or difficulties of the throat be produced. Merely warm the back by the fire, and never continue keeping the back exposed to the heat after it has become comfortably warm. To do otherwise is debilitating. When going from a warm atmosphere into a cold one, keep the mouth closed so that the air may be warmed by passing through the nose before reaching the lungs. Always avoid standing on the ice or snow, or where the person is exposed to a cold wind or draught. Keep the body in motion after any violent exercise while cooling off. An observation of these few simple rules will save many a doctor's bills, and not infrequently life.

The Rage for Sealskins.

Some thirty years ago sealskin was common enough. Boxes were covered with it, costermongers and calmen cut their capes from it. Then came a time when some cunning furriers discovered how to dye it a rich dark brown, and to give it that soft and downy texture which is its chief charm. At once ladies adopted the luxury. It was soon found that for cloaks, jackets, muffs, dainty little hats, collars, cuffs, bags, portemonnaies, for a thousand other articles of feminine use, it was the most delightful, the most beautiful, the most indispensable of all possible materials. The demand for it increased with a rapidity almost marvelous, and the fashion, instead of wearing itself out, has, if anything, steadily increased. Indeed, the best Alaska sealskins, like the furs of the sable, the silver fox and the Russian sea otter, command an altogether fancy price, and a handsome jacket of close texture and uniform color, with no white hairs to break the continuation of the tint, will fetch as many dollars as five-and-twenty years ago it would have fetched cents. The result is that the luckless seals have waged against them, now for several years, what practically amounts to a war of extermination.

The Channel Tunnel.

Late advices bring information from England that the tunnel under the channel is fairly under way, the drifting operations now carried on being in the line of the permanent way, the present diameter of the drift, seven feet, only requiring to be enlarged to complete the section in course of construction. The drift is in the "gray chalk" formation which is found on both sides of the channel. The line of the work is to follow the natural dip of this formation until a depth is reached of two hundred feet below the average depth of the channel, and then run a level to meet the corresponding work from the opposite side. If the chalk formation extends under the channel from coast to coast, as the experimental borings made all the way across clearly indicate, the practicability of the undertaking is already demonstrated. The work of excavation is carried on by machinery, and the cutting advances at the rate of two and one-half feet per hour. This gives an advance of fifty feet per day, or a mile in one hundred and five days, and if work is carried on from each coast simultaneously, progress may be made at the rate of a mile in fifty-three days. This, of course, is as yet only a theory, but a theory which is rapidly being reduced to practice.

The Indianapolis Journal thus alludes to what has been by some one termed "our national fizzle." The Yorktown celebration has been fruitful of blunders. Probably the greatest blunder was attempting it at all. So far as heard from, everybody has been swearing at everybody's stupidity, and the ill-humor has been contagious. The spirit of the irascible and tempestuous old Baron Von Steuben seems to have returned and presided over the entire affair. Even General Hancock got mad about something. Sherman went off into the woods to swear, and the genial Blaine was kept busy to the extent of his capacity in preventing a general explosion of heterogeneous and indiscriminate wrath. It will hardly do to say so, but there is a suspicion abroad that, instead of a national celebration, we have had a national fizzle. The "blasted Britishers" need have no sensitiveness on the subject. In fact, if they will not mention the fite we would be willing to drop it.

Sir Richard Phillips relates a funny incident in his career of a country editor in England. Late one night his printers overturned a column of type that had been set for the morning paper. It could not be re-set and printed in time to be sent off by the morning coaches, and in this dilemma the desperate editor bethought him of a column of "p." that happened to be at hand. This he placed in the form, headed it the "Dutch Mail," added an editorial note to the effect that it had been received too late for translation, printed his paper and started it off. Great was the perplexity of the Hodges in Leicestershire in ineffectual attempts to get at the important news conveyed in the Dutch Mail, and Sir Richard tells of one man whom he met in Nottingham who had kept the paper thirty-eight years in the hope of some time finding out what it meant.

There was so much interest in the Normal School case at San Jose that the papers could not refrain from trying it in their columns, while the case was before the court. The indiscreet editors have been fined for contempt of court. According to the same ruling, the manager of every paper in the United States would be punished for comments and statements bearing upon the trial of Guiteau. But the principle, if not carried to an absurd extreme, is a good one, in fact, their own sense of justice and propriety would generally restrain journalists from attempting to influence the course of a judicial investigation, if they had that right. The magistrates who have made the most fuss over contempt, on the part of the press, have generally been worthy of it, in the popular sense of the term.—Oakland Times.

"Drunk! My boy drunk!" and tears started from the mother's eyes and she bent her head in utterable sorrow. In that moment the visions of a useful and honorable career were destroyed, and one of worthlessness if not absolute dishonor presented itself. Well did she know that intemperance walks hand in hand with poverty, shame and death, and her mother-heart was pierced as with a sharp pointed steel. Ah! young man, if the holy feelings of love for her who bore you is not dead within you, shun that which gives her pain; adhere to that which gives her joy. If she is with you on earth, she does not, cannot desire to see her son a drunkard. If she is with her Father in heaven, shun that course of life which shuts the gates of heaven against you and debars you from her society forever. The drunkard cannot inherit the Kingdom of God.

Peruvian Bitters.

Cincona Bala. The Countess of Viceroy in Peru in 1820. The Countess, his wife, was prostrated by an intermittent fever, from which she was freed by the use of the native remedy, the Peruvian bark, or, as it was called in the language of the country, "Quinquina." Grateful for her recovery, on her return to Europe in 1822, she introduced the remedy in Spain, where it was known under various names, until Linnaeus called it Cincona, in honor of the lady who had brought them that which was more precious than the gold of the Incas. To this day, after a lapse of two hundred and fifty years, science has given us nothing to take its place. It effectually cures a morbid appetite for stimulants, by restoring the natural tone of the stomach. It affords excessive love of liquor as it does a fever, and destroys both alike. The powerful tonic virtue of the Cincona is preserved in the Peruvian Bitters, which are as effective against malarial fever today as they were in the days of the old Spanish Viceroy. We guarantee the ingredients of these bitters to be absolutely pure, and of the best known quality. A trial will satisfy you that this is the best bitter in the world. "The proof of the pudding is in the eating," and we willingly abide this test. For sale by all druggists, grocers and liquor dealers. Order it.
