A correspondent of the Post Intelligencer thus explains how a person crossing the equator at the 180th meridian loses one day out of his life, and why. In time each day begins at midnight; in place, the 180th meridian. When it is midnight at Greenwich it will be, let us say, Wednesday for 180 deg. east, and Tuesday for 180 deg. west, the 180th meridian dividing the two days.

Too Bad.

Those Kansas people seem to lack all the finer feelings of humane consideration that culture and education induce. Now, when a leading bank in Boston and another in New Jersey, failed, the depositors held meetings and denounced the thieving cashiers, and complained bitterly, all in a highly moral way. But when a Kansas cashier tried to get away with a million or so, a large circle of admiring and confiding friends held a meeting, and gave the delinquent the alternative of producing the stolen money or swinging from the limb of a tree—and they got it. Such action is crushing to that branch of industry.
