To-day is Palm Sunday, and in Catholic and Episcopal churches throughout Christendom is set apart in sacred and solemn commemoration of the entry of Christ into Jerusalem attended by a multitude carrying branches of palm, and shouting Hosanna to the son of David.

Gray's Harbor and the Chehalis.

Capt. Powell reports Gray's harbor as capacious in extent. The greater part is bare or shoal at low tide. The remainder, about 4000 acres in area, is deep and possesses good anchorage.

The bar is 3.5 miles from the entrance to the harbor. There are three channels over it, with depths at mean low tide of 17, 18, and 19 feet. Through the deepest channel in ordinary weather, draughts can be carried from 15 to 21 feet, according as the tide is mean-low or mean-high. From the bar to the entrance the channel is straight and plainly marked by the bordering and parallel line of breakers. The bar is pure sand, and formed by wave action. It is similar in character and changes to all the wave drift bars in front of harbors on the north Pacific coast. For depth, permanence, and facility of access, the channel compares favorably with the entrance to all harbors as far south as San Francisco.

The nearest lighthouse is at Shoalwater bay, 14 miles distant. Buoys have not been maintained on the chunel since the abandonment of Fort Chehalis several years ago.

Mental Slumber.

There are many people who through sheer mental indolence force you to repeat everything you say. I do not mean those who are slightly deaf, and who would fain conceal the fact. For them I have only pity, a large measure of charity, a pair of excellent lungs, and a conversational tone which is a sort of subdued whoop. No, I do not mean them. But I mean those people who are in a perpetual state of mental slumber, and whose brain-pans require crepitation to arouse them. These beings remind of the dwellers in Laputa, of whom Dean Swift wrote. It was the custom there for every man of weight to have a "flapper" ever at his side. the flapper was provided with an inflated bladder, suspended from a stick by a string. When another man, by his internal rumbling, betokened the fact that he was about to speak, the flapper would gently tap his master upon the ear-flap. His slumbering faculties thus aroused, the master would pay heed to his friend's vaticinations, and when he made reply, the friendly flapper of his friend would flap his flapper, who would then flap him.

There are many people in this world to whom I am forced, much against my will, to act as flapper. I am compelled, when I address them, to wake up their brains first and then repeat my remark.

Dean Swift says nothing of there being either female flappers or flappers for females in Laputa. I have no doubt they tried the experiment, but gave it up. The female flappers probably all died—some from nervous exhaustion, through conducting conversations in which they could not share, and others from overwork, consequent upon having flapped for sewing-circles and things.—Zulano, in Argonaut.
