After the Veto.

In comments accompanying his veto, President Arthur seems to think that the matter of Chinese immigration is simply some trivial little affair that we, out here on the Pacific coast, have got a little flurried over, and that we will see it clearer with returning reason. He would also seem to inculcate that ten years' exclusion is long enough, drawing the line between twenty years being "unreasonable," and ten years "reasonable." According to such geometrical ratio of logic five years would be the comparative and one year the superlative degree of that useful quality of reasonableness. There remains but one way out of the mess that His Accidency No. 4 has made—to pass the bill over his head. It is a serious question if this can be done. The bill can be made a law by a vote of two-thirds of a quorum of both Houses. In the Senate the bill was passed by a vote of 28 to 15. If one of the 15 can be made to go with the 28 the bill would pass. As far as the House is concerned there would be little trouble, as it went through by an overwhelming majority, and would be repassed by the same vote. The only thing in the way is the vote of one Senator. We hope it can be passed. For the second time in a few years the Executive has denied the demands of this coast; it remains with Congress to recognize the fact that the Pacific coast has rights that the rest of the Union must respect.

It was reported that the Chinese embassy would be withdrawn from Washington, if the President approved the pending bill. Something awful is supposed to have been threatened by this, but we confess our great ignorance by the admission that we cannot see what great difference it makes whether the embassy goes or stays, except to their hotel keeper. Our commercial interests will not be injured. They will send their tea and silk here just as long as they can make money by it. If there were an embargo on the importation of their products, they would try to smuggle them here. We cannot keep them off unless there is a blockading squadron. Nor are American merchants in China likely to suffer any more than at present. There are all conceiveable discriminations against them now. The Englishmen, who whipped their armies, destroyed their fortifications and exacted heavy indemnity from them, and are ready to do so again when it suits their purpose, have all of the advantages and all of the prestige.

In one report, at least, China is in advance of all other foreign countries. Agents, attorneys and lobbyists have been swarming on the floor of Congress, working against the passage of the restrictive bill. How those Massachusetts "philanthropists" would wail, if the British manufacturers should establish a paid lobby at Washington, to work for free trade! Their hypocrisy is evidenced by the fact that they do not take offense at this, the most flagrant instance of foreign interference in American affairs, ever known in our history.

Had Jas. G. Blaine been fortunately in the Presidential chair instead of His Accidency No. 4, how quickly the Chinese bill would have been signed.
