

The Daily Astorian.

ASTORIA, OREGON: SATURDAY, MAY 13, 1882. J. F. HALLORAN, Editor.

In General.

"About this time," read the old-fashioned almanacs, "look out for wind." And about this time in the political calendar we may also look out for "wind," some of the breezes being ill-smelling, and many positively noxious.

Three weeks from next Monday the forty-two thousand voters of this state will have an opportunity to declare who shall be their state officers and who shall represent them at the state capital. All this hurrah and talk about a "campaign" is fustian. It simply amounts to this: Both parties call upon those who believe in their doctrines to come up to certain designated places and be counted; the candidates go and see the men that they think will give them the requisite amount of aid; whatever can be said or done to influence those who have no minds of their own is done, and on the day of election those who, from an interest in the country or a desire to see friends or useful men elected, go up and register their choice, and the side able to produce the biggest tally-list is declared the winner.

Of course the usual whoop-up takes place; appeals are made to party passion, religious animosity and sectional prejudice; old times are recalled and old scores reopened; unworthy efforts are made to create political capital, and mingled with the unsavory mess is a flavor of patriotism and devotion to country which is sometimes the only ingredient that saves it from patrefaction. The present condition of affairs is anomalous. There is nothing on either side strong enough to deserve an attack, or weak enough to easily overcome. There is not the shadow of an issue between the two parties, and personal considerations and local influences will be the main factors in determining the result. Party lines are every year more loosely drawn. Political solidity is the legitimate outgrowth of ignorance, prejudice and brutality, and as popular education advances, as men get to doing their own thinking, they refuse to allow others to crack the party whip over their shoulders, or run them into the polls as cattle at a rodeo. When we speak of men, we mean men, and not the miserable whelps that vote for the unworthy candidate that is able to put up the most coin on the day of election.

A safe guide to go by in selecting a public servant is that rule of ordinary prudence which every sensible man follows in every-day life. If we want to employ a man in our business, we will not hire one who has the reputation of being a scoundrel, a drunkard, or a thief; and a man that can not take care of his own business is not fit to take care of ours; nor would we knowingly vote for such a man to put him in a position of public trust, for the rule of analogy applies in this case, and if he fools away his own business, what guarantee have we that he will not injure and disgrace the county and the commonwealth? Here we have one of the most potent attributes of human nature in collision with an abstract principle, for it is the most natural thing in the world for a man to vote according to his personal liking, and, if he doesn't know the candidate, give him the benefit of being on his favorite ticket. The whole matter depends wholly on the idea of the importance of a vote, and the individual estimates of such importance aggregate the final result.
