The Salmon Fisheries.

OWING to a disagreement, three years ago, between the fishermen and canneries, no fish were caught for four weeks previous to the end of the fishing time, which extended the close season that much longer. The result of such extension was apparent in 1881 by the greatly increased run of the salmon. In 1880 over ten million pounds of fish were caught, and in 1881 the catch was estimated to be over fifteen million pounds, an increase of 50 per cent. This year it is supposed there will be a larger increase. This is confirmatory of the wisdom evinced in the enactment of statutes guarding the fish during the close season. The Fish Commissioners have for ten years obtained statistics from the canneries of the quantities of fish caught. On the strength of this information the Fish Commissioners have been able to conduct their operations intelligently. The supply of fish has been so largely increased by these intelligent efforts that new canneries have been able to start, and the older institutions have been able to increase their capacity and product. It is just as necessary to the welfare of the canneries as it is for the guidance of the Fish Commission that all the information in the possession of canners and fishermen concerning the catch and movements of the salmon in Sacramento River and its tributaries should be freely communicated to the Commissioners. The very existence of the canneries depends upon a proper and systematic continuance of the supply, which experience has proven must be artificially maintained.

The above from the San Francisco Bulletin, especially the last sentence, is suggestive of a matter of the gravest concern to cannerymen on the Columbia. Reports from the fisheries along the river daily reach us, stating in substance that the catch for the season of '82 is nothing like what it was for the corresponding season of '81, and that unless a change in the supply takes place very soon the pack of salmon for '82 will be an extraordinary light one.

How to prevent a recurrence of those "light" years is the problem. Whatever the cause it is evident that the disastrous effect of such cessation would be that one of the main factors of Astoria's prosperity would be seriously crippled. Artificial propagation is the only remedy at command. The history of all pisciculture shows that artificial hatching is the one thing that can be relied upon to keep up the supply of food fish in any locality that is thoroughly fished every season. How to go about it is the next point. It is not our province nor our purpose to go into recounting the causes of the failure of the Clackamas hatchery; even now it is claimed that that enterprise was not a failure. If it has demonstrated that fish can be artificially propagated in the Columbia river it certainly was a success as a starter. The only parties to act in this business are the cannery-men themselves. National aid may be invoked, state aid may be called for: it would be a good idea to make an effort to get either national or state aid, but "while the grass is growing the horse is starving," and delay in such a matter is fatal to the results that must accrue to prompt action. We believe that concerted action on the part of the cannerymen who have their money invested in the business and who are directly concerned in the matter, will result in the establishment of a hatchery in some eligible point that under intelligent supervision could be made to produce results commensurate with the money expended. All this thing wants is a leader. Who will start the matter going.

Stanley in Africa.

STANLEY is said to be making a success of his exhibition across equatorial Africa. He started up the Congo river, moving from the west coast eastward, in the fall of 1879; and a dispatch by way of Paris announces that he is well advanced on his road to the other side of the continent. This expedition is in many respects the most important that has ever been undertaken, as its purpose is mainly commercial; and it is hoped to open the vast interior of Central Africa to the trade of the world. Stanley is not traveling an altogether unknown path. Livingstone and Cameron and Stanley himself have been over a good deal of the ground, and he has the advantage of previous discoveries in mapping out his course. Before the close of the year he ought to emerge upon the east coast and bring with him full information as to what are the prospects of bringing the region into commercial relations with civilized nations.
