

The Daily Astorian. ASTORIA, OREGON. THURSDAY, JUNE 8, 1882. J. F. HALLORAN, Editor.

The Result of the Election.

TILL the official returns are all in from the various precincts in the county and passed upon officially, nothing positive can be stated on closely contested results. Reed is elected without a doubt; he has fifty majority in this county, sixty in Columbia, and, we are informed, has forty in Tillamook; his majority will in any event, not yet reported, be considerably over one hundred. Between Smith and Hobson, the fight is closer; it is generally conceded that Smith is elected. In the county offices, McGuire is elected judge, Trenchard county clerk; Twombly, sheriff; Heilborn is probably elected treasurer, and W. W. Parker, assessor; these last two being still in doubt; Fisher and Leinenweber seem to lead for commissioners; G. F. Parker is elected county surveyor, H. Sloop, school superintendent, and B. B. Franklin coroner.

In the state the entire Republican ticket is elected, by majorities varying from 1000 to 2400. Unexpected gains and losses make it impossible to say at this writing how the next Legislature will be in the senate, and assembly, but it seems certain that the Republicans have a majority on a joint ballot, thus electing a Republican United States senator to succeed Senator Grover whose term expires next year. This is counting two Republicans from Clatsop and Tillamook, one from Columbia, five from Yamhill, two from Washington, one from Linn, four from Clackamas, six from Douglas, two from Benton, nine from Marion, ten from Multnomah, four from Polk, one from Wasco and one from Grant. This would give the Republicans, including all hold overs, forty-eight votes, it taxing forty-six to elect on joint ballot.

Senator Mitchell. An interview with Senator Mitchell, of Pennsylvania, is published in the Philadelphia Press, in which the Senator states clearly the nature of the independent movement, which is the most important event in current politics. The Senator is careful to say that it is not a movement against persons, nor is it a scramble for place. Its object is better methods of party and government administration, and the destruction of patronage as a personal or factional power. If the Republican party is to hold together as a controlling force in the election of 1884, Senator Mitchell and his friends hold it to be indispensable that the "boss" and "machine" system of party government should be overthrown.

Now the "boss" and the "machine" are everywhere the logical result of the spoils system. They are defended, as Tweed and his ring were defended, as merely leadership and organization. But this is a trick of words which did not save Tweed; nor will it save any boss, although, unlike Tweed, he be personally a reputable man. While the system remains there will be always bosses and machines. The independent Republicans in Pennsylvania, therefore, are not merely declaiming against a boss whom they do not like, for the benefit of one they do; they are not angry because others control the offices which they wish to control; but they aim at placing the civil service on another basis than personal influence. If their convention shall speak as strongly as Senator Mitchell, it will mark a new departure in politics. The Senator says:

"The National Administration appears to be determined to stand by this Stalwart use of the spoils system to perpetuate itself. This is a suicidal policy, and it will fail, as it deserves to fail. The President has power under existing laws to inaugurate a true civil service reform in every great post-office, custom house, and department of the government. It has been tried in those at New York, and has succeeded admirably. It insures good service on purely business principles, and it has resulted in large savings in expenses wherever it has been tried, whether here or in England. It will save public men from the waste of most of their time incident to the practice in vogue, and it will leave them free to devote their energies to their proper duties. After some experience in public affairs, and after an examination into the practical workings of the system as a member of the Civil Service committee of the Senate, I am fully satisfied that this system should be properly adopted and worked out to what I regard as an assured success in this country. It will come, and come in the near future. This force is a balance of power in this country, and it will as I hope and believe, control the next Presidential election. Had President Arthur seen this, and acted accordingly, he might have been his own successor. There may be true, yet I fear there is not. I have small hope of his conversion to this view."

Nothing could illustrate more strikingly the immense progress which this movement has made than that a Senator of Pennsylvania should fling down the gauntlet to his colleague, the chief representative of the spoils system, and stake his political career upon the result of the contest.

SPECIALS from Washington state "the general impression is now that Congress will adjourn about the 10th of July. The house manifests a disposition to go to work, and as the Senate keeps up its work well it will probably be got through with in about a month. There is little prospect for any large enterprises, such as improvement of the navy or inter-oceanic ship canal getting through. The Democrats continue an obstructive policy in everything save appropriation bills."

ARTHUR doesn't want a second term. He is a sensible man not to want what he could never get.
