SETH GREEN ON FISH

"I have made some of my most interesting studies of nature in the morning," said Seth Green. "That is the time to see the insects at their best—to see the mad wasp stinging the spiders without killing them, and packing them away where they are kept alive for weeks to be used when needed. I have seen a small green worm hanging down on a web. An ant, stationed on the limb above, pulls up the web and, just as the worm comes within reach of its tiny claws, down drops Mr. Worm. The ant pulls up again and again, and the worm lets out another reef and goes down. This continues until finally the ant grapples the worm and both go down together in a grand scramble, in which the worm manages to shake off the ant. This leaves the worm on the ground. His web is so strong that the other end is still fastened to the limb above. What does Mr. ant do? Give it up? No, sir. I have seen him go up the trunk of that tree, crawl out again on the same limb and go to work pulling up the same web. Then, after another battle, I have known the ant to get the better of the fight and lug the worm off to his hole, three rods away."

"Why, talk about reasoning powers! The perseverance and instinct of these little creatures are wonderful. People go out to fish. They splash around, stand up in the boat, drop their lines three feet away and wonder because they don't catch trout. They forget that trout can see. Fish learn the tackle, and fish are as a rule, local in their habitation. There are not as many gypsies among fish as among men. Any man who will take the pains to study fish—or who may remember a tithe of what he reads about them—can catch them. They are smart but our brains will beat them. I remember once fishing for salmon trout a long time and taking nothing. Finally I concluded to get down and look into the water, and so throwing my coat over my head I got the required shade and peered down. The salmon would sail up and look at the minnow. Then with a quick dart, he would close his teeth around one-half of the minnow and open them again like a flash. He did not attempt to eat the minnow, and half of the severed body would drop to the bottom. When it had fallen to the bottom of the lake the salmon would go down leisurely and eat it. The next time when I dropped my hook and let the quick bite of the trout I let out enough line to send the hook to the bottom, and the result was that when the salmon went down for his meal, he was fooled and I had him.—Utica Herald.

The Ant

"Go to the ant, thou sluggard, and if she is well fixed you may strike her for enough tin to enable you to set up the ice cream to your girl." That, or something similar, is what Solomon, a very intelligent gentleman, who lived some years back, said, and he never diffused any advice that has been more liberally or cheerfully acted upon. Sol is dead now. The ant still survives, however, and her nephew continues to take the advice of the gentleman above alluded to.

There are several species of ants, one of which is known as the red ant, but this one is not related by consanguinity to the sluggard, though it is sometimes attached to him, in which case he displays more than usual energy. Statistics show that there is more real business to a square inch in a red ant than in any other member of the human family. The young man who sits between two girls at a picnic, and maintains his composure with two red ants boring for his marrow in different sections of his body is more of a hero than he who was a thousand bloody battles. One peculiarity of the red ant is that the red ant is the male member of the firm but recognized as an uncle. When a red ant decides to make himself noticed at a picnic, he is inconsiderate, uncompromising, and rash in the extreme, and what makes him more to be dreaded is, that he relishes one part of the human anatomy just as well as another, and is liable to fasten on right between one's toes. True, people don't generally attend picnics without shoes on, but the means that this animal will resort to to bring himself into prominent notice at a picnic are terrible to contemplate.

Where Three States Meet.

There is a stone near Pownal, Vermont, where three counties and three states meet, viz: Massachusetts, Vermont and New York. A while ago, a man leased the spot, and erected a three-cornered shanty containing a three-cornered bar, with the stone at the center, and began to dispense corn-juice without a license, to the sovereigns of the three states. When the Bay state constable came in due time with his hand-cuffs and warrant, the culprit stepped into the Vermont corner, and pointing to the intervening stone, defied him. The same happened with the Vermont officer. Then these constables connived to meet and seize him together. While they were pulling out their warrants and hand-cuffs the New Yorker broke away from them and got over into the state of New York, where he was beyond the jurisdiction of both. Then the majesty of the law in three states was aroused and three officers moved upon the shanty at one and the same time, and the defiant rum seller was now in hot water. He carried out the "joke" to the end, however, for, getting on the top of the stone which stands partly in the three states, he shouted: "Come on and divide me into three parts, but I'll make it hot for the one that takes the two-thirds of me that don't belong to him." He had, however, taken too large a quantity of his own medicine to enable him to preserve his equilibrium on top of the stone and while still defying the constables, he fell off and rolled over into the state of Massachusetts, where he was secured by the officer of that state, and taken over to Williamstown in triumph.

Judgment Affirmed.

The supreme court yesterday affirmed the judgment of the circuit court of this county, in the case of John C. Powers, who was convicted of the murder of Ben Cornelius, on the fourth of last July, and sentenced to be hung. An appeal was taken to the supreme court and after dragging along for a month it has at length been "decided" against Powers. Accordingly another day will be fixed for his execution. The circumstances surrounding the unfortunate killing of Ben Cornelius were of such character, that the conviction of Powers was a surprise to many acquainted with the facts. Mr. Power's last chance for life lies in an appeal to the governor for his interposition. It is more than likely that a petition for his pardon will receive a vast number of signatures in this city, and that influential men will interpose themselves in his behalf. Mr. Power's long confinement, coupled with his wounds, has had a telling effect on his health and he is very much broken down. Some action will probably be taken in the matter.—Standard, 11th.

On the Stump.

One of Baltimore's retired capitalists was formerly an Ohio politician of some note. A score of years ago, while making a canvass for the Legislature, he took the stump, and in one of his speeches at Dayton he was interrupted by a man in the crowd, who called out:

"Frazier [his opponent] says you grind the poor."

"I grind the poor! Great heavens! but last fall I gave away 500 bushels of potatoes to the poor of this district!"

"Frazier says you are a temperance man!"

"Merciful Scott! but what a liar! Why, my friends, I am so drunk now that I can hardly stand on this box!"

"Frazier says you got your start by buying skunk-skins," continued the man.

"Does he? Did he say that? Alas, my friends, Frazier tells the truth about that; but it was Frazier himself who trapped the skunks, and he worked in so many ground-hog pelts on me that I lost $200 on the lot."

Dowling

"Now who knows Dowling?" asked Jefferson Davis in a New Orleans address the other day, adding: "And yet this Dowling I hold higher than Leonidas!" Dowling commanded forty-two men in a mud fort at Sabin Pass and just before a hard fight with a federal iron-clad fleet these men shook hands with Dowling, he saying to each, "We will fight till we die."

Chicago is the greatest lumber market in the world. The single item of sawed lumber received there in 1881 would lay an inch flooring fourteen feet wide round the earth at the equator. The amount of lumber manufactured in the three states of Michigan, Wisconsin and Minnesota during 1881 would lay such a floor forty feet wide.

In the course of its work in fine lock-making a Rochester firm uses many hundreds of screws so small that the threads cannot be distinguished by the naked eye, and the shoulder can hardly be seen. They cost $2 and $4 a gross, and a man can take $100 worth into his mouth at once.

In the Whole History of Medicine

No preparation has ever performed such marvelous cures, or maintained so wide a reputation, as AYER'S Cherry Pectoral. It is recognized as the world's remedy for all diseases of the throat and lungs. Its long-continued series of wonderful cures in all climates has made it universally known as a safe and reliable agent to employ. Against ordinary colds, which are the forerunners of more serious disorders, it acts speedily and surely, always relieving suffering, and often saving life. The protection it affords, by its timely use in throat and chest disorders, makes it an invaluable remedy to be kept always on hand in every home. No person can afford to be without it, and those who have once used it never will. From their knowledge of its composition and effects, physicians use the Cherry Pectoral extensively in their practice, and cleverly recommend it. It is absolutely certain in its remedial effects, and will always cure where cures are possible.

Peruvia Bitters

The Count Cinchon was the Spanish Viceroy in Peru in 1630. The Countess, his wife, was prostrated by an intermittent fever, from which she was freed by the use of the native remedy, the Peruvia bark, or, as it was called in the language of the country, "Quinquina." Grateful for her recovery, on her return to Europe in 1632, she introduced the remedy in Spain, where it was known under various names, until Linnaeus called it Cinchon, in honor of the lady who had brought them that which was more precious than the gold of the Indies. To this day, after a lapse of two hundred and fifty years, science has given us nothing to replace it. It is effectually cures a morbid appetite for stimulants, by restoring the natural tone of the stomach. It attacks excessive love of liquor as it does a fever, and destroys the feverishness of the system. The bark of the Cinchon is preserved in the Peruvia Bitters, which are as effective against malarial fever to-day as they were in the days of the old Spanish Viceroy. We guarantee the ingredients of these bitters to be absolutely pure, and of the best known quality. A trial will satisfy you that this is the best bitter in the world. "The proof of the pudding is in the eating," and we willingly abide this test. For sale by all druggists, grocers and liquor dealers. Order H. Loch & Co., agents for Astoria.
