

The Daily Astorian

ASTORIA, OREGON: SATURDAY, JUNE 17, 1882

ISSUED EVERY MORNING. (Monday Excepted). J. F. HALLORAN & COMPANY, PUBLISHERS AND PROPRIETORS.

Terms of Subscription: Received by Carrier, per week, 25 Cents; by mail, four months, $1.00; by mail, one year, $3.00.

THE CITY.

THE DAILY ASTORIAN will be sent by mail at 25 cents a month, free of postage. Readers who contemplate absence from the city can have THE ASTORIAN follow them, DAILY or WEEKLY editions to any post-office without additional expense.

Sheriff Twombly goes to Knappa this morning.

The Willamette is at a stand. The upper Columbia is falling.

Bishop Morris writes that he will be here to officiate at Grace church to-morrow.

The managing committee will meet at the rooms of No. 2 at half past seven this evening.

Lieut. Buchanan came down from Portland yesterday, and will go down to the bar, if practicable, today.

Rev. E. R. Loomis will preach in the Congregational church Sunday the 18th, morning and evening. All are cordially invited.

The Oregon is due from Portland this morning. She has 328 passengers. One hundred and twenty-five tons of her freight are for Astoria.

A welcome fog overhung the city yesterday at dawn, and a good westing down in the morning was just what we needed. An uneasy sultriness, a sort of gummy, sticky feeling, was manifest in the afternoon, but towards night the clouds rolled up again and a good old-fashioned shower made every one feel better.

Capt. George Flavel had a narrow escape from a serious accident yesterday afternoon. He was riding out the roadway, when his horse shied and jumped over the side, landing on the rocks below. He sprang out without sustaining any injury. The buggy and harness is sadly demoralized. He sold the animal immediately after the accident and says that he will get something to drive that has more "horse sense."

Alfred Carruthers, who came over from North Bend last evening, says that on the 13th inst. a wrecked schooner drifted in on the beach, her deck breaking away as she struck the breakers. She was the St. George, of San Francisco, ninety tons, loaded with lumber, and had evidently been drifting for a long time. Nothing was aboard to identify her further than is stated. When Mr. Carruthers left she was fast breaking up.

The new Presbyterian church is well under way; the foundations are almost ready, and next Monday work commences. We are glad to hear that sufficient funds have been guaranteed to enable the building to go on to completion without delay. Father Powers procured a considerable sum in Portland last week, which speaks well for the liberality of our sister city, and it is believed that when completed the building will compare favorably with any church edifice in the state.

Body Found.

NEHALEM, P. O., Tillamook county, Or., June 13, 1882. EDITOR ASTORIAN: There was found to-day at the mouth of Nehalem river, boat No. 33, W. P. Co., without gear of any kind, containing one dead man about 6 feet in height and about 160 pounds weight, dark hair and slight, sandy moustache, face and hands very freckled; had on a pair of white, hand-knit woolen socks, red flannel drawers, cotton flannel undershirt, and brown duck overalls (new); two-bladed knife with broken handle in pants pocket; apparently about 28 years of age. Buried where found. C. Pvc.

For Twelve Years.

In the state circuit court last Thursday morning, Judge Stott sentenced Carrie Bradley to serve a term of twelve years in the penitentiary for the killing of J. N. Brown. This says the Oregonian, closes the last scene in the courts of justice in this remarkable trial. There was not a great many spectators present, and the sentence created no surprise. The woman who has figured so conspicuously for the past three or four years in the criminal records of the city will soon be taken and immured within the walls of the state penitentiary. When she comes out she will be an old woman. The attraction of face and features which has perhaps been the wreck and ruin of her own life and the enticement of many into the paths of sin, will have disappeared, and the lesson which time will have impressed upon her heart may still bear its fruits before her death.

SALMON HATCHING.

What to Do and How to Do It.

Returning from the launch of the Gen. Miles, last Thursday afternoon, we met two of the leading cannermen on the coast, and the conversation turning on the meagre figures that this year's pack represents, one of them said: "Well, what else can be expected; we fish right along, year after year; we constantly drain the river and put nothing in; what is the result; look at Maine; forty years ago the rivers were full of salmon; it used to be a clause that the apprentices put in their indentures when they were bound to a trade, that the bosses shouldn't put salmon on the table more than twice a week; now they'd be glad to get it twice a year. What should be done to breed the fish." "But," said the other gentleman, "that has been tried on the Clackamas, and it failed." "No," said the first party, "it has not failed, it is simply inert for want of funds; Jim Cooke did all a man could do for the enterprise, but you can't suit everybody; and some of the very men that ought to come up handsomely say they don't care, that they'll fish as long as there is salmon in the river and then quit. The matter is right here in a nut shell. Look at this bay; here is a vast industry concentrated here at Astoria. Suppose it cost $10,000 a year to keep a salmon hatchery going. Is there a spot of ground in the world where such a comparatively small sum could be made to yield greater results. Ten thousand dollars a year, placed in competent hands means the annual breeding of 3,000,000 salmon. Now salmon will come back full grown the third year to their spawning ground. Take last year's figures; there were 540,000 cases packed; it took on an average three salmon to a case; there is, say, 1,700,000 salmon; the pack was worth two and three-quarter millions of dollars. Can not the state of Oregon well afford to spend a few thousand dollars every year to foster an industry that in a little spot of water will produce nearly three million dollars annually. State aid is what is wanted, that is state control; every canner man on the river would willingly pay a tax which would be light because it would be uniform to keep up such an establishment, and by putting it into the hands of an experienced pisciculturist the thing would be bound to be a success." "Do you think," we asked, "the salmon would come back to the parent stream?" "I am positive of it," was the reply. "Upon what do you base your belief in reference to the great good resulting from a fish hatchery?" "Upon the beneficial results manifested in other localities. Take the McCloud river for example. In 1870 the river was fished out; competent men were placed in charge, fish were stripped, the headwaters were stocked, and the third season after it was an uncommon thing for the boatman to pull in two hundred fish in a single night. The state should take hold, for among private enterprises you cannot insure the concert of action that is necessary to success. Then such a man as Seth Green, or Prof. Baird, or Livingston Stone, should be given full charge, and we will paid for his trouble, and such a thing as a failure in the salmon pack on the Columbia would be an impossibility. As it is, you see for yourself; last year there were over half a million cases packed; this year, but little over half that number will leave the river; in that ratio, it will not be long before Clackamas salmon, the finest flavored fish that swims, will, as far as the canneries are concerned, have 'gone glimmer' through the dreams of things that were."

Big Milking.

DEER RIVER, W. T., June 19, 1882.

EDITOR ASTORIAN: I send you by Mr. Olson, an item, also two pounds of butter, the same being two pounds out of eight pounds six ounces made from the milkings of one small cow of common stock, in four days, or eight regular milkings; the same from forty-three pounds of milk per day, on grass alone. Beat this, oh ye Clatsopers, and I will shut the cream off from coffee, and try it again. L. HANSEN.

CLIPPED AND CONDENSED.

The new warehouse and docks, says the Yaquina Post, are completed. Work on the "fill" just in the rear of docks, is being pushed forward at a fair rate.

The fact that people are going around buying up old rubber shoes leads us to suspect that there must be a new kind of hologna sausage in the market.

When the Queen of the Pacific arrives on this side of the continent, tri-weekly steamers from San Francisco to the Columbia will be the order of the day.

The most imposing man in San Antonio is the recorder on Monday morning. Last Monday he imposed fines that aggregated $180, which went into the city treasury.

A Loskyton detective says that at least three out of every five women in that city consult fortune-tellers three or four times a year. The other two fifth go to blind.

A patent has been granted to W. E. McCord, of East Portland, on a fish wheel. Probably this is the same kind of an engine of destruction that is used at the Cascades.

Mike Morgan who was shot by Barnes at Prineville recently, died on the 7th after suffering the most intense agony. It is thought that the murderer may be Seattle.

There is a strong contest between the eastern and western sections of Lake county for a division of the county. Lakeview does not want a division, but Linkville does.

The men charged with bribery in the Ohio Legislature all went home not much the worse for wear, but Watson, the witness who exposed them, is still in jail at Columbus.
