

The Daily Astorian.

ASTORIA, OREGON: TUESDAY, JUNE 27, 1882

J. F. HALLORAN, Editor

Oregon's Senator.

"CALL no man happy till he dies," said Solon, thus tersely voicing the thought of all ages, that posthumous fame alone does justice to the memory and the merits of men.

Among the many names that we of this coast delight to honor, not even the name of Broderick, of California, excites more reverential remembrance than that of Colonel Baker, United States senator from Oregon, who fell, as the world knows, while leading his men in the fight at Ball's Bluff, Va.

On the 30th ult., Congressman George, of this state delivered the Decoration Day address at Balls Bluff, and, in a eulogy of the gallant spirit, he said: "He was a wonderful man—one of those geniuses of nature which flash thwart across the sky of human existence. Offoreign birth, he laid down his life for the country of his adoption. We were proud of him. My state, the most distant on the golden Pacific, honored him with her highest trust. He was our senator when he fell. We are proud of our soldier, our orator, our statesman, and our hero. Baker was patriotic and magnanimous. His was the clarion voice in the grand volume of invocation which everywhere rose to high heaven. Spare us from the madness of disunion and civil war," and he was the last of the senators to give up the hope that something might be done by conciliation and compromise. He hoped, he sympathized, he struggled to the last, but all in vain. At the final moment he nerved himself for the desperate encounter. In the senate, in these words, he proclaimed his intention: "Now, I will not vote to lay down arms till, without treaty, the flag of the United States waves over every portion of its territory. Till then give the president a million men, give him the whole revenue of the government, the whole property of the people; do not refuse a single regiment; do not furl a single sail; do not abate a single jot of all your embattled vigor till that hour has come; do not make peace until the glory of the American flag shall be its own defense. Why, sir," he exclaimed, "I have heard it said that there was a time in Ireland when a virgin, alone, unguarded, could go through all its length and breadth with a crown upon her head and a golden vase in her hand, and no man disturb her honor or rob her of her treasure. I desire, before I make peace, to see the time when a volunteer drummer boy shall be able to carry the flag of the United States in every city and in every wilderness where it has once floated; amid the enthusiasms, the submission, the profound reverence, of every man, woman, and child who gazes upon its stars." He, like Clay and Webster and Jackson and Lincoln, was for trying the strength of the constitution. His soul became fired with military ardor at the attack upon Sumpter's walls; and at a mass-meeting in Union Square, in New York, he delivered an address which thrilled the souls of all who heard it. He there pledged his personal services to his country as a soldier, and closed with these impressive and eloquent words, which were greeted with a thunder of applause: "And if from the far Pacific a voice feebler than the feeblest murmur upon its shore may be heard to give you courage and hope in this contest, that voice is yours to-day. And if a man whose hair is gray, who is well nigh worn out in the battle and toil of life, may pledge himself on such an occasion as this, and in such an audience, let me say, as my last word, when amid sheeted fire and flame I saw and led the hosts of New York as they charged in contest upon foreign soil for the honor of your flag, so again, if Providence shall will it, this feeble hand shall draw a sword never yet dishonored—not to fight for distant honor in a foreign land, but to fight for country, for home, for law, for government, for constitution, for right, for freedom, for humanity, and in the hope that the banners of my county may advance, and whosoever that banner waves there glory may pursue and freedom be established."

It is a sad coincidence, in view of the eloquent oration delivered by Colonel Baker, in California, on the laying of the Atlantic cable, when he joyfully proclaimed that "thought had bridged the Atlantic and cleared its unfettered path across the sea, winged by the lightning and guarded by the billow," joining Europe and America, and calling, as he did, for another field to seal the Sierra Nevada as he had sounded the sea, until the Atlantic and Pacific had been linked together. That, singular as it may seem, the first message, a few years after, flashed across the completed link to the Pacific carried a current of sorrow to the people of the west in the announcement of the death of Colonel Baker.

Just So.

TALKING about advertising, and the too prevalent practice of begging people to advertise, the New Tacoma Ledger sensibly says: "If men do not believe in advertising, if they do not think it necessary for the promotion of their business—and it is not infrequently the case that newspaper advertising would be of no benefit—why seek to force it upon them? Are they not the best judges of their own business, seeing that they have better acquaintance with it both generally and in detail than any one else? Do not force it, do not press it, for your own personal reputation as a man of spirit and pride in a profession which should rise above the calling of beggary. Make a good paper, put capital of labor and coin into it, so that it will win circulation and become valuable as an advertising medium. Even announce the fact and declare that it is valuable, if you can truthfully do so, just as men declare that their groceries and drygoods are valuable, but in the name of Heaven, for your own sake and for the sake of a large number of worthy people in your profession, do not button-hole your neighbors and whine like a weak cur about giving "support" to the papers asking them for an "ad." It is contemptible. It is outrageous. It is outrageous that every time these neighbors you have whined to and button-holed and bored meet with a newspaper man they look upon him with contempt, and are free with him, think he has no money, and regard him as a proper person to make a butt on all occasions, and to belittle in many ways."

The Democrats of California have nominated General Stoneman, of Los Angeles, as their candidate for governor at the ensuing election. The prominent contestants were Hearst, whose only claim was that he owned $20,000,000 worth of property, and Johnson, who based all his strength on the fact that he was a "C. P. man." Stoneman is a rarity in these days, he is positive, honest, with clean hands, and a good record, and represents the better element of California politics. Three years ago, under the new constitution craze, there were three railroad commissioners elected, Beerstetober, of San Francisco, Coné, of Red Bluff, and Stoneman. The first two fell down before the potent influence of the sack; Stoneman was not purchasable, and voted in the minority. He deserves credit, and will be a hard man to beat.

SOME of the rolling mills in Pittsburg last year paid thirty per cent. to the owners. It is not surprising that they can afford to shut down for a time, when the workmen strike for an advance in wages.
