Our Resources.

We would continually hold up to the attention of those persons in the east, who wish to locate in the northwest, that this region offers more varied inducements to both capital and labor than any other. All the undeveloped resources that give greatness to the greatest states in the Union abound here. We have iron and coal in immense quantity, that gave New York, Pennsylvania and Ohio their peculiar advantage; we have forests that dwarf the lumber interests of either the southern, north-eastern or northwestern states; we have gold and silver awaiting development, that will sometime place us alongside California in respect to precious ores; the northwestern corn fields we cannot rival, but our wheat fields stand comparison, in yield and quality of grain, with the best cultivated fields of England. The average yield of the virgin prairies and rolling hills of eastern Washington and Oregon will overtop the best English average. The water powers of New England have their equal in the abundant resources along the streams of western Oregon and Washington, and even the fisheries "down east" have their parallel in the off-shore fisheries of the north Pacific ocean, while the shoal of eastern waters are of less commercial value than the salmon of these western rivers. We surpass, in many localities, the best hop yards of the east; our fruit is superior to that of almost every section and promises to be an important item of production in the near future. Take the Pacific northwest in all its length and breadth, and it holds up in comparison with any and all other countries, simply because it has a good climate, a range of reliable products, great natural advantages and undeveloped resources, and offers more reliable rewards for labor and enterprise than can be found elsewhere. Nature has done much for us in giving us immunity from the sharp vicissitudes that affect humanity so often elsewhere. We know little of tempest, pestilence, or famine. The seasons know less change, the crops know more certainty, and health is better assured here than in many other parts of the Union; and the people who come here from all parts of the world, as well as from all states in the Union, bring reliable character and more genuine enterprise than can be often found in new countries. We have reason to be proud of the character of the people of Oregon and Washington deservedly bear.

There is a steady stream of immigrants pouring hither that continually refreshes us with the life and best energy of other states. The immigrant wonders to find that he is always among men of character and intelligence, who are ever ready to help build school-houses and do their part to help build up the community. The slaggard stays at home, but the man who deliberately reads of this region studies its advantages of climate, soil and products and extent of resources, and concludes to come here, and does come here, as a rule, possesses more than average intelligence and enterprise, and is certain to do all in his power to push the world before him. We welcome such men, and they find those who were in advance of them ready and willing to do all that they can to aid their beginning life with new surroundings.

A man can here select from a wider range of occupations than he can in any western state. He can adopt farming or stock raising, and can choose climate, soil and locality, and grow products to suit his inclination or his health. Conditions have changed, so as to offer a wider range of occupations. Farming is widening out into a profession, instead of being a protracted calling. We have room for dairies, a call for stock breeders, demand for fruits and vegetables to supply a fastidious market, and while heretofore the farmer had a small market to satisfy, he now has the world for his customer.

The time has fully come, also, when the mechanic arts and manufacturing enterprises of a great world should claim places here. We can now invite, and promise to ably support enterprises and industries that could not have lived a few years ago, so we invite all callings and professions to come and labor among us.

An Electric Icestorm.

Texas is a country of marvels. Wonderful things are constantly happening. Strange stories are told and stranger truths are developed. A week ago to-day a cloud a little larger than a man's hand passed over the Big Wichita valley, eighteen miles north of us. It lingered but a moment, yet in that moment unheard-of things transpired. It did not hail, but there dropped electric ice. Pieces of ice five inches in diameter, fifteen inches around, were hurled from the upper realms, dashing upon the ground like cannon balls from heavy artillery. Dozens of pieces were gathered up and weighed and found to run from fifteen to twenty ounces. One piece went through the new shingles on Tom Gee's house, and descending went through the piano ceiling over the sitting-room. At another house, Colonel Whaley's, we believe, a piece struck the stovepipe projecting from the roof and cut it off as smooth as could have been done by an immense cleaver. A number of sheep on Stine Bro's farm were killed, and we have heard of a few cattle having their legs broken. Fortunately but one or two pieces to the acre fell. Had they fallen in numbers like hailstones usually come, the entire district would have been one vast ruin; a mingled heap of animal and vegetable life gone out.

Once upon a time, while Field Marshal Murat was discussing the ethics of journalism with a few friends, he felt moved to remark: "Well, you may talk about the idiots you have known in the profession but we have the blue-ribbon ass of the Ohio press up at Dayton." At that moment the door opened and a visitor entered. "And, dear me! here he is," continued the imperturbable Field Marshal; "Gentlemen this is W. D. Bickham of the Dayton Journal. Bickham, we were just speaking of you."

Peruvian Bitters

The Count Cincelion was the Spanish Viceroy in Peru in 1620. The Countess, his wife, was prostrated by an intermittent fever, from which she was freed by the use of the native remedy, the Peruvian bark, or, as it was called in the language of the country, "Quinquina." Grateful for her recovery on her return to Europe in 1622, she introduced the remedy in Spain, where it was known under various names, until Linnaeus called it Cinchona, in honor of the lady who had brought it to the world. This was more precious than the gold of the Incas. To this day, after a lapse of two hundred and fifty years, science has given nothing to take its place. It effectually cures a morbid appetite, stimulates the stomach, restores the natural tone of the system, it attacks excessive love of liquor as it does a fever, and destroys both allies. The powerful tonic virtue of the Cinchona is preserved in the Peruvian Bitters, which are as effective against malarial fever to-day as they were in the days of the old Spanish Viceroys. We guarantee the ingredients of these Bitters to be absolutely pure, and of the best known quality. A trial will satisfy you that this is the best Bitter in the world. "The proof of the pudding is in the eating," and we willingly make this test. For sale by all druggists, grocers and liquor dealers. Order H. Loeb & Co., agents for Astoria.
