Our Greatest Need.

ASTORIA is an enterprising community. Whenever anything is needed, whether it is a steamboat, a schoolhouse, a barge or a building, it is always forthcoming.

There are several things we need; several things that come under the head of necessities; we have a daily paper; swift and commodious transportation in all directions; a good city government; an efficient county organization; and several business enterprises that are daily growing.

These wonders are now looked upon with a dreamy sort of indifference. But if any one twenty-five years ago had said that the feat could be performed, he would have been set down as a madman.

But this is only a part of the wonders that are being performed. By attaching at Malta a telephone to the submarine cable from Alexandria the bombardment of the 12th was distinctly heard at the island in question.

The next thing is the expense. A $75,000 capital is needed. That can be raised in a very little time. The formation of a stock company, the incorporation as such, the obtaining of a twenty years franchise from the legislature and all the rest of the preliminary work can be done this fall; active operations can be in progress by January next, and there is no reason to prevent Astoria from having plenty of clean, pure water by next season.

A $75,000 capital is needed. That can be raised in a very little time. The formation of a stock company, the incorporation as such, the obtaining of a twenty years franchise from the legislature and all the rest of the preliminary work can be done this fall; active operations can be in progress by January next, and there is no reason to prevent Astoria from having plenty of clean, pure water by next season.

Time was when the present water facilities were ample; even now, except in the dry weather we are at present having we can get along after a fashion—but the faster the city grows, the more people we have here, the greater need for sufficient water supply. We are having just the same experience that every city in the country has had. It is for us to profit by such experience. To start building water works just large enough to supply the present population would be but little better than doing nothing in the matter.

A DISPATCH says the Bulletin was published in a contemporary yesterday morning in remarkable time. It was dated "London, July 16th—7 A. M." It must have been received in the office of the journal in question about 2 A. M., of the same day, that is to say five hours earlier than its date.

These wonders are now looked upon with a dreamy sort of indifference. But if any one twenty-five years ago had said that the feat could be performed, he would have been set down as a madman. Roger Bacon did have a more or less distinct notion of locomotives and balloons and diving bells. Upon this point at least, we are upon firm historical ground. That the celebrated monk was the true Mother Shipton. But no one had imagination enough to predict that messages could be sent under oceans and over continents with the rapidity of thought.

By attaching at Malta a telephone to the submarine cable from Alexandria the bombardment of the 12th was distinctly heard at the island in question. To these results mankind has worked its way slowly. We have Franklin first in the line catching lightning with his kite. Next we have Morse, another American, inventing the telegraph. After that came the cable, and after the cable the telephone, the last, American in its conception likewise. These matters are accepted as so much a matter of course now, that they do not even excite remark.
