ASTORIA, OREGON: FRIDAY, AUGUST 4, 1882. J. F. HALLORAN, Editor

Value of Immigration.

In discussing the values of immigration, the United States Economist says:

Recurring to the money value of an immigrant, the most recent works on immigration assume $1,000 as the worth of each permanent addition to our population. These writers, however, have adopted as their basis of valuation, that an article is worth what it costs to produce it. It is true that the cost of production as an element in computing the true value should not be lost sight of; but we think it more correct to say, the value of an article is what it will bring in market. The almost universal law, supply and demand, governs the labor as well as the produce market. It may cost the farmer of the northwest 75 cents to produce a bushel of wheat; but if, owing to a limited demand, he can obtain but 60 cents for a part of his crop and, at a later period, owing to unusual demand 90 cents for the remainder, the cost of the wheat continues at 75 cents, while the value is respectively 60 and 90 cents. So with human beings, regarded only as instruments of production. The son of a rich man, whose training and education cost $20,000, if not trained to usefulness, is worth far less to a community than the son of a mechanic of small income whose whole cost has not exceeded $1,500, if the latter be a well-instructed and skilled artisan. Transport from Germany to a sparsely-settled portion of the northwest, two men; the one a healthy laborer, with limited education, whose life, support and education has not exceeded $1,500, the other a highly educated man—an architect—but of inferior muscular development, whose money cost was $30,000. As no demand exists for fine public buildings or elegant private mansions in that locality, the worth of the latter is far less than the former; while in one of the large cities, unless there is an over-supply of architects, his value will greatly exceed that of the other, who can do nothing more profitable than carry bricks and mortar for the erection of a building which is designed and supervised by the architect.

A most entertaining exhibition for all, at least, who are interested in economic questions, will be that of the International Fisheries, which, opening in London on the 1st of May next, is to continue six months. The exhibits will be arranged in seven classes: Sea and fresh water fishing, including paraphernalia, outfits, etc.; the social, moral and physical condition of fishermen, commercial and economic features of the industry; fish culture; natural history; history and literature of fishing; fishery laws and commerce; and loan collections. To the best displays in each of these departments medals and diplomas will be awarded. Prizes of £100 are to be given for the best essay on each of three topics: The Natural History of the Commercial Fisheries of Great Britain, the Relation of the State to Fishermen and Fisheries, and the Possible Increase in the Supply of Fish. For the discussion of these and similar topics conferences will be held. It is probable that the steamer which is now building for the fish commission will be the feature of the American collection; while the number of entries made by individuals will depend upon the fate of the bill now before congress, appropriating $50,000 for the transportation of specimens. The response of other governments to the call for contributions has been most generous; and this government owes it to itself that it should not be backward. Considering the great and varied interests in this department of industry which are possessed by the United States, our exhibits should be worthy of both the government and the people. The American fisheries are of much greater importance, both in extent and value, than those of all northern Europe combined, and we can hardly afford to neglect an opportunity to gain information which may help us to further increase their productive-ness.

The Czar of Russia has never mustered the courage to go to Moscow and go through the ceremony of coronation. He is afraid of dynamite, and has ten times receded from his resolve to attempt the journey. In addition to the danger from the nihilists, he is now menaced by those in higher position who do not take kindly to what they call an uncrowned sovereign. He is in danger of being deposed if he stays where he is, and he runs the risk of dynamite if he undertakes the journey, but has at last concluded to choose the last alternative. The relations of other sovereigns will not attend, prudently preferring the envoys should run the risk of a blowing up. This monarch would be popular and secure in his position if he would accede to the just demand for a constitutional form of government. He is brave, whatever else may be said of him, to lead a life of such terror, in order to assert despotic authority over his subjects.

On the 1st inst., the president sent a message to congress vetoing the river and harbor bill, and the next day, that body passed it over his veto, the vote confirming it standing 41 to 16 in the senate, and 123 to 60 in the house. So that the Republican party is pleasantly saved whatever odium attaches to the measure, while an admiring constituency reaps the fruits of the appropriation.

The committee on judiciary in the house of representatives have, by a vote of ten to one, adopted a resolution declaring forfeiture of the Texas Pacific R. R. Co.'s land grant. But as they contemplate transferring the grant to the S. P. R. R. Co., it is not quite clear what good such action will be to would-be settlers.

That was rather an ingenious explanation of his vagaries given by August Kars, a Williamsburg traip. "I live," he said, "and if I worked I could only live, so what is the use of working? If I worked I could not go about and see what I do, so I don't work."

CINCINNATI is disbanding fire companies, stopping street repairs, and reducing the police force because it has no money, and still pays annually $200,000 to have German taught in the public schools.

ENGLAND is still concentrating troops on Egyptian soil; Arabi Bey is strengthening his forces, and Germany suggests a joint occupation of the Suez Canal.
