ASTORIA, OREGON. THURSDAY, AUGUST 16, 1882. J. F. HALLORAN, Editor.

Our Northern Neighbors.

The traveling agent of the "Resources of Oregon and Washington" from whom we have so extensively quoted, writing of a recent trip to Chehalis and Montesano says:

"It was low tide when we started from Oysterville, laying bare thousands of acres of flat opposite the long half-mile wharf only reaching about half way to where the little 16-ton steamer lay waiting to receive us. The driver of the Ilwaco stage pressed his team into the bay, until met by a small boat called a dingy, into which we stepped from the stage, and were quickly taken aboard. The wind was blowing quite fresh directly ahead, but the Gen. Garfield plunged fearlessly into the rising waves—sometimes covering us with spray—rounding near the bluff white shores of Goose point, and reaching the first landing (Bay Centre) ten miles from Oysterville, in about an hour and a half. This village lies on the northeast side of the point, and consists of some fifteen buildings—wharf, house, store, school-house and residences, with a light growth of spruce and hemlock in the background. A half-dozen oyster-boats were anchored near the shore opposite. A narrow belt of rich tide land borders Patia creek, which flows into the bay here. A few Indian huts are seen near its mouth. Capt. Brown carries the U. S. mail, and we now head for North Cove, two miles east of Toke point light house. The Indian village of Georgetown, containing some fifty people of the Quinault tribe, is situated on the shore some two or three miles to the eastward. The U. S. government provides them with a school, but no other assistance. There is no landing at the Cove, and the steamer lies out in deep water and sends the mail ashore in a small boat. It is nearly dark when we get under way again, and 10 o'clock before the captain announces our arrival at South Bend. This town—situated on the left bank of the Willapa river, about three miles from its mouth—is at present the most important business centre of the Shoalwater Bay country. Simpson & Co.'s saw mill, located here, manufactures about twelve million feet of lumber annually, shipping in their own vessels to San Francisco. They employ forty men at the mill, and a much larger force in their numerous logging camps.

There are extensive bodies of excellent fir and spruce timber upon the head waters of the Willapa and Nasel rivers. John Dunn brings down four million feet a year from Mill creek, a branch of the former; A. Soules, two million; and Joe Goodell and J. Fowler, one million each, from the main Willapa; and J. D. Rhea and H. Ellis, three and a half million feet more from the south fork of that river. Mr. Dunn informs me that the logs scale on an average about 1000 feet, for which they receive $4.75 per 1000. Capt. S. C. Mitchell is building at South Bend for Messrs. A. Crawford, John Wood & Co., a fine vessel of 300 tons burden, which will be launched early in the fall. Boats drawing eight feet can reach this point at low tide.

We remain over night here, finding quite comfortable accommodations and good fare, at the South Bend hotel, by S. S. Ewing. In the morning we ascend the river nine miles further to Woodward's Landing, at the head of steamboat navigation on the right bank, thirty miles from Oysterville. It is quite free from snags, log jams or obstructions of any kind, there being four feet of water on the shallowest bars at low water. The current does not exceed four miles an hour in any place. The Willapa valley is over thirty miles in length, varying from one-half to one mile in width. A considerable area of the richest tide lands extends along its banks for fourteen miles from its mouth. These produce large crops of grass, afford excellent pasturage, and may be easily reclaimed by diking for agricultural purposes. They are bordered by a forest of spruce and hemlock, which increase in density as we advance, except where consumed by timber fires. It is settled all along the way, there being more than seventy families living upon the upper Willapa above Woodward's Landing, on and near the little openings known as "Forks," "Half Moon," "Fern" and "Elk" prairies. They speak highly of the healthfulness of the climate, though the women complain somewhat of the excessive rainfall in winter, which confines them so much in doors. The people are engaged mainly in dairying and stock-raising. Small fruits generally do well, but apples are subject to blight and specking.

Returning, Capt. Brown landed me at North Cove, Toke Point, just in time to secure passage on Peterson's stage for Peterson's Point, fifteen miles north, at the entrance to Gray's Harbor. This line makes regular trips twice a week in connection with the Ilwaco, Shoalwater Bay and Gray's Harbor steamers. We started from the North Cove house, Mrs. Johnson, situated in a very pleasant Scotch pine opening near the bay; and crossing the point some two and a half miles, most of the way through a thick growth of pine, spruce and alder, followed a magnificent beach for eleven miles, then recrossed to Mr. Glen Peterson's, on the Gray's Harbor side. He landed here twenty-six years ago in an Indian canoe, and now owns a ranch of 2,200 acres, extending from ocean to harbor, with a frontage of six miles on the former and three and a half on the latter. It embraces—besides a good dairy range, now supporting thirty cows and other stock—a considerable tract of rich bottom land, easily reclaimed for farming purposes by diking. A seaside resort called "Ocean Park" has recently been laid out here. This vicinity possesses rare attractions for those health and pleasure-seekers fond of hunting and fishing."
