SECRET HISTORY.

Alleged Facts Explaining the Origin of the Egyptian Trouble

The origin of the present troubles in Egypt was a speculation of Ismail. He paid £100,000 into the hands of his friends in Cairo, with which they were to buy support for him. Two negro regiments were purchased. He was to land, and these regiments, with Arabi and their head, were to declare for him. After he had spent his money his heart failed him and, then Arabi determined to act without him. He at once turned to Constantinople, and promised large sums of money if he were supported. Then commenced a series of intrigues, into which the French allowed themselves to be drawn. When Dervisch was sent to Egypt his mission was, if possible, to patch up some sort of reconciliation between Arabi and the Khedive, which would have been followed by the deposition of the latter. The Sultan, however, when the crisis came, was afraid of discovery, and, in the end, Dervisch, acting under his instructions, urged Arabi to act with moderation. But Arabi knew with whom he had to deal, and he declined to put himself in Turkish hands—in which perhaps he was wise, for he would have been strangled or poisoned. The government are to be praised for having cut the Gordian knot by the bombardment of the forts of Alexandria. But they would have been wiser had they taken the precaution to have some troops at hand. Had 5000 troops been landed Alexandria would not have been burned. Europeans would not have been massacred, and the troops of Arabi would probably have gone over to the winning side. The landing of English troops would have been justified to Europe on the ground of the inevitable logic of events. No one can for a moment assert that with the means to do so the English admiral would have been blamed for preventing incendiary fires and massacres.—London Times.

Ruined by Goose Eggs.

The meanest man resides in Merced. His name is William Fahey, and he keeps a hotel. He made a wager with George Soper that the latter could not swallow two dozen raw eggs in twenty consecutive minutes. The wager was for $25, and Soper, as he waited for the eggs, allowed his mind to revel in castle-building. He thought how much good he could do with that $25 and how many smiles he would bring to the pallid lips of orphans and fatherless and husbandless. Soper knew he could do it as easy as rolling off a log, and he was just looking out of the window to call in some poor little girl or boy to get a dollar or two for the poor, hard-working mother, when the eggs were brought in. He immediately lost all confidence in humanity, for Fahey had rung in twenty-four goose eggs, not one of them weighing less than half a pound. Soper don't go to Foley's place any more. It broke him all up.—Stockton Independent.

France used 30,000 barrels of cider in making wines last year, but a French bottle of cider will always catch the American wine-bibber.

A Key West shark, captured the other day, had among the contents of his stomach a half-dollar with a hole in it. The shark is supposed to have taken it at forty-five cents.

Five Thousand Dollars Buried Under a Tree.

Several years ago a man who had made a small fortune in the mines came down to the Willamette valley and purchased a piece of land near Milwaukie, in Clackamas county. He was known to have money and for that very reason, perhaps, kept himself secluded and lived a hermit's life alone in a small cabin in the middle of a heavy wood. Here his seclusion was unmolested for several years and he seldom came out to the light of day, and then only to get needed supplies for the sustenance of his life. Once he failed to go to the village store for his usual purchases and a few persons repaired to his cabin to see what was the reason. He was found lying upon his bed, very ill, and they took him away to more comfortable quarters. He grew worse instead of better and soon was beyond the hope of life. Just before his death, during a lucid interval, he tried to tell his attendants where he kept his money. He described a tree just one hundred yards from his cabin, but forgot to mention in just what direction, and then told them to look in another direction a few rods when a large fir tree with a projecting root would be seen. Under the root was his gold, a sum amounting to five thousand dollars. Those to whom he told this tale in broken and almost incoherent language imagined that they understood him aright and, when he was dead, tried to find the treasure. It was never found and is yet lying where the old man buried it. A good many trees are standing around the spot where he built his lonely cabin and it would be a task of a year to find the right one with his meagre description alone to go by. Afterward the cabin was burned and all traces of its hermit owner were obliterated but the fact remains that his money lies buried at the foot of the tree where he said it did when he lay dying at Milwaukie. The cabin was in what is now known as Sellwood's pasture and the spot has been visited by many of the curious. Some day, perhaps, the gold will be found, but until it is accidentally discovered the trouble of looking for it will scarcely be repaid by finding where it is hidden.—East Portland Vindicator.

A Step in Advance.

The difference in measurement of British and American vessels was pointed out in this journal some time ago. It is a difference ensuring greatly to the advantage of the former. In the British measurement liberal deductions are made for the space occupied by machinery in steamships, and on these and sailing vessels the space occupied by the crew is deducted by the gross tonnage. It followed that only available cargo and passenger space was measured, or what was really equivalent to that. The British vessel therefore paid less wharfage and harbor dues, while she carried more for her registered tonnage than the American ship. As a matter of fact, however, some of the eastern built ships have managed to get very low measurements recently. How it was done is known only to the owners and some of the custom house authorities. The bill which passed just before the adjournment of congress, modifies the old rule of measurement and makes it conform very nearly to that of the British standard.

Another bill of some consequence became a law just at the close of the session. It extends to foreign steamships the provisions of the inspection laws, now applicable to domestic vessels, concerning freight and combustible matter. Senator Sherman intimated that he would bring forward a bill at no distant day exempting from local taxation all American vessels engaged in foreign trade. Probably, this measure will carry at the next session of congress. It thus appears that some earnest movements have been made looking to the removal of burdens from American shipping. Under the present laws, American shipping has been placed at such a disadvantage that capitalists in this country have found it better, in many instances, to invest in ships sailing under foreign flags. It is said that Americans really own a considerable number of ships in this way, and are disposed to make still further investments. The public opinion of the country seems to be hopelessly divided on the question of admitting free of duty all articles used in the construction of ships. Of course the copper, and other metal producers, do not want the tariff removed from metals. The timber men do not want free timber, and the cordage men do not want free rope. It may be assumed, however, that there will be a steady approximation to a standard which will finally place American shipping on something like an equality with vessels of British construction. The instances already quoted are evidences of this forward movement.—Bulletin.

The following notice by a Virginia blacksmith indicates readjuster sentiment on the part of Mose's partner: "Notis: De co-partnership heretofore resisting betwixt me and Mose Skinner is hereby resolved. Dem what owe the firm will settle wid me, and dem what the firm owe will settle wid Moses."

Portions of the old elm which stood on Boston Common, have been placed as relics in Independence Hall, Philadelphia. They were presented by the Boston board of aldermen, and consist of a large section of the tree and a polished veneer of the wood, upon which is photographed a picture of the tree as it stood before its fall.

Another massacre is reported from the South Sea islands. The recruiting brig Janet Stewart, while at Maylata, Solomon island, the crew, with the exception of one man who escaped, were murdered during the absence of the captain and second mate. The vessel was afterwards burned.

A lazy man near Fort Smith, Ark., abandoned a well after digging four feet. The man who bought the farm dug another foot and struck a vein of coal worth thousands of dollars.
