THE CITY.

THE DAILY ASTORIAN will be sent by mail at 10 cents a month, freight postage. Gentlemen who contemplate absence from the city can have THE ASTORIAN follow them, DAILY or WEEKLY, editions to any post-office without additional expense.

The Wolfe has 8000 cases salmon aboard. The Jas. G. Bain will clear to-day with 20,000 cases.

Do you know of any city in the northwest, of Astoria's size or wealth, that has no gas works?

The Levi G. Burgess, Ullock and Valparaiso have arrived at Queens-town; the Emily Chapin has arrived at Liverpool.

Twenty thousand dollars have been apportioned to Oregon for public surveys, out of the $600,000 voted by congress for that purpose.

The barge No. 1, of the Astoria Transportation company, is expected down to-day with half a million bricks for the new Odd Fellow's building.

Lieut. Schwatka was married last Wednesday to Miss Brackett, of Rock Island, Illinois, niece of Major Brackett, at the residence of the bride's parents.

La Mascotte was played to a crowded house last night. After the parts run smooth, and the voice of the prompter is heard less frequently it will be a delightful opera th hour.

Columbia river salmon sells in London at thirty-two cents a can. This ought to afford an excellent profit to the middle man. At London figures the cargo now aboard the Wallacean would sell for $1,075,200.

We are informed by parties interested in the matter that a petition will be prepared in a few days, praying the legislature to grant a charter to the corporation about to be organized, conveying the right of way in the case of the projected wagon road to Clatsop.

Parties from Tillamook report that all kinds of shell fish are in abundance at and near Garibaldi. Quahaugs, razor-backs, blue clams, mussels, crabs, oysters and other molluscs are daily caught in large quantities. The Tillamook Packing company have already put up about one hundred barrels of salmon.

The Gen. Miles arrived back from Tillamook yesterday. She brings several passengers. To-day she starts from John Day's river with a raft of 1,000,000 feet of logs for Portland. This vessel is fast getting up a reputation for promptness and speed. She will make another trip to Tillamook in about eight or ten days.

Lieutenant Frank Greene, U. S. signal corps, returned on Sunday from a reconnaissance of the telegraph line between Astoria, Forts Canby and Stevens. He reports the route perfectly practicable and easy for construction. He left again on Tuesday for Port Townsend, for the purpose of viewing the route from that point to Cape Flattery. He is expected to return here about Saturday.

The Wheat Fleet of '82.

It is a noticeable fact that every day vessels are arriving in which are not listed, and, in a measure, are unexpected. Usually, it is telegraphed when a vessel leaves port for the Columbia, and, in former years, something like an estimate could be made of the amount of tonnage on the way. This season no procurable data is at hand upon which any intelligent estimate can be made. It is said that for the purpose of preventing any such calculation, that the movements of vessels impart such a delightful sense of novelty to every arrival. Men who ought to know, say that the high freights of last winter were greatly due to the fact that everything was "gauged," and as the wheat had to be moved the freights had to be paid, no matter if they did go to ninety-two shillings and six-pence.

Remarks from an "Old Citizen."

ASTORIA, Aug. 17, 1882. It is a good thing to have a high opinion of ones self, and firmly believe that one is the high and mighty know-all and do-all, but there is possibly such a thing as carrying that feeling to excess and make ones self somewhat ridiculous. The letter of Mr. Wm. MacCann, of Liverpool, to the Board of Trade is an illustration. The gentleman may be actuated by the best of motives, but partly through misapprehension, perhaps, and partly through his overweening self-conceit, he has written a letter which shows ignorance of the facts, or is a most wilful misrepresentation, and calculated to give a wrong idea in regard to the bar towage here, and also the number of disasters which have occurred that the Columbia river bar can be responsible for.

The Bain Trial.

The interest manifested in this trial was exemplified by the crowd in attendance at yesterday's session. The fourth day of the trial began by an examination of nearly two dozen different witnesses relative to the character of the deceased; some of the testimony was favorable, some unfavorable, on the whole it would seem about evenly balanced. After this had been finished a recess was taken for the purpose of allowing the court and jury to examine the premises where the act was committed, at eleven o'clock court having reassembled, arguments began. F. D. Winton, associate counsel for the prosecution opened for the state. He held that no bias or sympathy or personal consideration should have any part in this case, the sole function of the jury being to weigh the evidence adduced, and under instruction from the court bring in a verdict that is, as their judgment dictates, in accordance with the facts, and consistent with justice. He claimed that the testimony established an existence of intent on the part of the defendant, and that the plea of self-defense was rendered untenable by reason of the alleged fact that he, (the defendant) was the aggressor and before throwing the ax expressed his intention to kill. Mr. Winton spoke for an hour, and at the close of his remarks court adjourned to half-past one.

Upon reassembling, the argument for the defense was begun by C. W. Fulton, who, with Judge E. C. Bronaugh and J. Q. A. Bowley, has conducted the defense throughout. Mr. Fulton's line of argument was that if defendant thought that he was in danger from deceased, he was justified in taking such necessary precautions as he saw fit at the time. He was not of the opinion that the charge was justified by the facts of the case, and going into the details of the case, took up the testimony and commented upon it. He spoke for an hour and was listened to with intense interest by the densely-packed assemblage. He appealed to the jury to save the boy from the gallows by bringing in a verdict of acquittal, believing that the true judgment of the case would necessarily entail such result. He was followed by Judge Bronaugh, who argued first on points of law and then defining the grades of crime, passed into an analysis of the testimony. He impeached the validity of the assertion that an ax was flung through the door, or that Bain hit Alexander in the face with his stick on the occasion of his coming out of the shop the second time. Further discussion of the testimony and argument justified, the counsel claimed, his request that the jury weigh well such evidence. Judge Bronaugh made an affecting peroration and claimed that to send the defendant to the penitentiary would be to blast his chances for life.

He was followed by District Attorney Caples, who closed for the prosecution. Mr. Caples reviewed the entire case, and insisted that sympathy had no part in the case and demanded that justice be done. The whole melancholy affair was gone over for the last time in court, and at half past four the district attorney concluded his remarks. The judge then charged the jury, who were removed in care of the sheriff to deliberate and render a verdict. At twelve o'clock last night they had not agreed upon a verdict, and it was manifest that there was a deadlock.

Remarks from an "Old Citizen."

ASTORIA, Aug. 17, 1882. It is a good thing to have a high opinion of ones self, and firmly believe that one is the high and mighty know-all and do-all, but there is possibly such a thing as carrying that feeling to excess and make ones self somewhat ridiculous. The letter of Mr. Wm. MacCann, of Liverpool, to the Board of Trade is an illustration. The gentleman may be actuated by the best of motives, but partly through misapprehension, perhaps, and partly through his overweening self-conceit, he has written a letter which shows ignorance of the facts, or is a most wilful misrepresentation, and calculated to give a wrong idea in regard to the bar towage here, and also the number of disasters which have occurred that the Columbia river bar can be responsible for.

I suppose the Portland board of trade and not Mr. MacCann should be held responsible for the statement that there were five wrecks on the Columbia river bar within the past twelve months, whereas there was but one wreck which was in charge of a tug boat; the bark Corsica and the Edith Lorn went ashore in attempting to sail out. That there were three or four other vessels lost at various points on the coast, in the neighborhood of the bar, without either tug or pilot, should not be charged to the account of the Columbia bar.

The next gross misrepresentation is in regard to the monopoly business, leading shippers to believe there is a monopoly here, granted by the state, whereas the state has had nothing to do with the towage business for upwards of five years, and at the time it did give a subsidy to encourage parties to put tug boats on the bar, it was universally conceded to be a wise and beneficial thing for a state to do.

It is not my intention to hold forth the idea that the present tug boats on the bar will answer the purpose for all time, but when I see such one-sided articles in regard to the business as appears in the Oregonian of the 16th inst., and proceeding from such a respectable source, a regard for commercial decency and fair play induces me to protest against such unfairness.

Old Citizens.

The Deschutes River. The Deschutes river is one of the most romantic and beautiful streams in the state. It rises on the eastern slope of the Cascades north of Mount Thielsen in the northern part of Lake County, flows in a northeasterly direction, a distance of about 200 miles, and empties into the Columbia a few miles above The Dalles. It supplied chiefly by the snows of these mountains, and is icy cold from its source to the mouth. Over one hundred miles of its length is through the rough, wild and almost barren portion of this county, known as the lava beds and riarocks, though in many places it has valleys, which are settled by thrifty stock men. It is truly astonishing to see the amount of water carried off through its channel. Its depth does not vary two feet during the whole year. Some of the wildest and most magnificent scenery is found along this stream, many views of which have been taken, and are now in the possession of the citizens of this place. It is not navigable for any great distance in any place, on account of the extreme swiftness of its current. But the most beautiful feature of this magnificent stream is the variety, and immense numbers of trout found in its waters. Anyone but a murderer at heart becomes ashamed of himself after fishing in this river for a day or two. Sixty fish an hour is very fair, if not good angling, but this feat has been accomplished in the Deschutes. The fish are trout, no other kind ever being caught, except an occasional white fish. These trout vary in length from six to eighteen inches, embracing the several varieties of mountain trout, silver-sides, red-sides and salmon trout. From its source to a distance of perhaps a hundred miles, it is a continuous torrent—a series of cataracts and falls. In many places for miles its banks are over a hundred feet in height, in some places rising perpendicularly one hundred and fifty, or two hundred feet.—Prinville News.

Peruvian Bitters

Cinchona Rubra. The Count Cinchon was the Spanish Viceroy in Peru in 1626. The Countess, his wife, was prostrated by an intermitting fever, from which she was freed by the use of the native remedy, the Peruvian bark, or, as it was called in the language of the country, "Quinquina." Grateful for her recovery, on her return to Europe in 1632, she introduced the remedy in Spain, where it was known under various names, until Linnaeus called it Cinchona, in honor of the lady who had brought them that which was more precious than the gold of the Incas. To this day, after a lapse of two hundred and fifty years, science has given us nothing to take its place. It effectively cures a morbid appetite for stimulants, by restoring the natural tone of the stomach. It attacks excessive love of liquor as it does a fever, and destroys both alike. The powerful tonic virtue of the Cinchona is preserved in the Peruvian Bitters, which are as effective against malarial fever to-day as they were in the days of the old Spanish Viceroys. We guarantee the ingredients of these bitters to be absolutely pure, and of the best known quality. A trial will satisfy you that this is the best bitter in the world. "The proof of the pudding is in the eating," and we willingly abide this test. For sale by all druggists, grocers and liquor dealers. Order of L. Loeb & Co., agents for Astoria.
