THE SENATORSHIP. Politics in the Abstract.

As the time draws near for the convening of the Legislature the senatorial fight becomes more interesting—to the contestants. The candidates are numerous: first, of course comes J. H. Mitchell; then come Judge Boise, W. Lair Hill, W. D. Hare, Geo. H. Williams, and two or three others who hope to figure as a dark horse.

This interesting—in the abstract—to note the course of "politics" which to the average candidate is confounded with place. In every fight like the present the prospective bowls of soup constitute the prize for which all are striving.

But, seriously speaking, it is worthy of note how much the getting and holding of office has come to be a profession. It is a trade by itself, and one that requires skill, tact, and a long apprenticeship in which to win success.

It takes a high order of talents of a certain kind, and we know of nothing in our civilization that more aptly illustrates the doctrine of natural selection than the perseverance with which men continue to seek for office and profitable emolument and so arrange that ultimate triumph may crown the result.

As for believing all that is said of a man in prominent position none but the depraved or utterly foolish do that. A man that has no enemies doesn't amount to a hill of beans.

The fact that he has no enemies shows that he has no individuality; that there is nothing positive to him; that he never "stays with" what he says. Of course we don't mean that the possession of one's neighbors' ill will indicates any extraordinary cleverness; but our meaning can be illustrated by the remark we once heard an old man in Wisconsin make in reference to a neighbor of whom 'twas said "there was no harm in him."

"No," was the rejoinder, "nor is there any good in him, either." As Frank Pixley says in the last number of his free-spoken paper: "The man who has no enemies deserves no friends. The man who has never made a mistake, or done wrong, is the man who never had the courage to attempt to assert the right. The man who has never slopped over is like the empty bucket that has no contents to spill, and the man who can truly say that he has changed no opinion, and has been ever consistent, makes the broad admission that he is an idiot who has had no opinions to change. It is better to be right to-day than consistent with yesterday.
