The New Pilot Bill.

The new pilot bill introduced into the House by Sharp, of Clackamas, passed to second reading last Friday, and comes up before committee of the whole, next Tuesday afternoon. The bill describes the Columbia river between Astoria and its mouth, including a radius of five miles outside the outer buoy, to be known as the bar pilot ground; also the Columbia river above Astoria and the Willamette within limits of ship navigation; provides for three pilot commissioners for said pilot grounds, to hold office for three years, one of which shall be appointed by the governor, one by the board of trade of Portland, and one by the chamber of commerce of Astoria; and in case either of said boards shall fail or neglect to make such appointment for a period of 20 days, then it shall become the right and duty of the governor to make the same; provides that no person shall be granted a license by the board unless he is an American citizen of the age of 21, of temperate habits and good moral character, and possesses requisite experience as a navigator and pilot. Each pilot, before receiving license, shall deliver a bond of $5,000 signed by himself and two accepted sureties, and in failing to perform his duty shall be held liable for damage done; it also regulates fees of pilotage.

Hallo! Where are you going? Why, to Frank Fabre's for a pan roast.

Served Him Right.

"Capt." Gorman, of the Norton House, in Portland, was fined $25 and costs, in the police court of that city, last Thursday, for slapping B. A. Seaborg, of Ilwaco, in the mouth. Mr. Seaborg is an old resident at Ilwaco, engaged in the cannery business. Wednesday he went to Portland, and was met at the house by a runner for the Norton House, who took his valise and gave him a check therefor. Mr. Seaborg desired to go to another hotel, and presented the check at the office of the hotel, demanding his valise. He was informed that the valise could not be found. Gorman put the check in the drawer, and when Mr. Seaborg asked again for his valise or the check, so that he might not lose his baggage, Gorman slapped him in the mouth. It was in evidence that Mr. Seaborg is a quiet, inoffensive man, and gave no cause for the battery, except to ask for his baggage. The next time Gorman may be a little more disposed to treat travelers in a decent manner.

Commercial.

Under date of the 21st, the Willamette Farmer says: The situation in commercial circles presents no change from that of a week since, although wheat is arriving from various sections of the northwest in great abundance. The various docks are being filled, while several ships are being rapidly laden with grain to cross the ocean, yet quotations are by no means firm and fixed, on account of the variance of charter rates between holders and shippers. No ships are taken except those positively necessary, and indications of an early break in rates are flattering. Ainsworth dock contains hundreds of tons of beautiful wheat from the great prairies east of the mountains, which will bring up rates in a foreign market, and raise the standard to a position it of right belongs. Three vessels of the new fleet have sailed; six more are loading; nine are open to charter, and eight are discharging. We have tonnage in port aggregating 25,333 tons. Now due 3,171 tons. Due in October-November, 12,225 tons, and on the way, all told, nearly 53,000 tons. There will be no lack of tonnage. Quotations, as near as obtainable, may be given at about $1.55 per cental.

The Ly-in and The Mow-us.

A Lion, who had lived for several years in a certain neighborhood and gained general respect for the manner in which he had conducted himself, was suddenly made the object of slanders and abuse. When he came to trace these stories back, he found that they had been started by a Mouse. "Why have you slandered me?" demanded the Lion. "Because the Mouse people will only accept me as a Mouse," was the reply. "But am I to blame for that?" "Perhaps not; but why should you be a Lion, able to strike down an Ox, while I am but a puny Mouse, able only to frighten women and children? What grieves me is the fact that Nature made a mistake." "Very well," said the King of Beasts, "you go forth and roar and kill, and I will become a mouse." The Mouse stalked into the forest and began to growl and roar, but his efforts were received with laughter. After he had tried it again and again, the Owl dropped down beside him and observed: "Instead of making me afraid, you disturb my slumbers and annoy my friends. Come inside, out of the malaria." Moral—The Mouse that nibbles at crumbs is doing all that is expected of him. Secondly, he who looks for the mistakes of others simply shows the world his envious feelings.

"A Way" and "The Way."

In these delightful summer days what pleasure it is to cast the line in some shady trout pool, where the overhanging branches curtain the glaring light of dusty noon, and where the unrequited woodsie path gives immunity from noisy intrusion. And then beside the evening campfire, the juicy troutlets being the while discussed, to hear of other kindred pleasures of the palate, such as Oldfellow, who is a good man to fish with, can tell. Sometimes, as recently, Oldfellow takes Companero with him, and the two, with all the racy zest of true rascals, tell of piscatorial feats wherewith they assisted.

"I once," says Companero, "joined in a fisherman's breakfast in a shady nook beside some dark rocks in a curve of the stream. My friend's preparations were of a very primitive character: a few bright coals of fire, a square bit of smooth board, a small tool-box, a paper of salt, a roll of fresh butter, a few biscuits, and a basket of fresh-caught beauties. He chose one out of the receptacle, with skin as black as a wolf's throat and eyes like a seal, and almost as thick down at the lower dorsal fin as he was across the shoulders. 'He breathed a breath or two,' said Companero, 'and each time such gills! A pomegranate opened in the heart is the true color of the gills of a first-rate fish.'

My friend laid him tenderly on the board with one hand, and with the other took his knife, and in the natural division of the upper jaw touched him with the edge; and, before you could say Jack Robinson, the fish was cut down the back to the flapper of the tail, the board turned over, and he opened, tacked, and toasting, inside and outward, upon the coals. As soon as he was done, a small piece of the fresh, yellow butter was spread over him—a cast of black pepper, and a little salt in fine crystals (undissolved, and hence not merely salt-water), and the fish was ready.

"Well, Companero," asked Oldfellow, "did you eat the fish?"

"Eat him!" exclaimed Companero. "I scooped two of them out of their jackets, and have been growing fat from that day."

"Well, that is a way to cook a fish," replied Oldfellow, "but is not the way." And the practiced lover and promoter of good things proceeds to indicate what is the "ettest way," of which the following is what Billy Luckaday, in the play, calls "a curtailed abbreviation, compressing all the particulars."

The fish is opened in front about three inches, drawn and cleaned by one, and only one, quick immersion in pure water. No tarred string, Companero, please, through the lower jaw; to poison his flavor. Lay him on a nice napkin in the bottom of a basket, and take him home unbruised, to repose upon the white table in the kitchen.

"And now, the small, deep stewpan, with its thin cullender, or strainer, on which the fish is to be lowered to the bottom. Thou hast it; it is gently raised again without injuring its integrity of form; and now, thanks to thy sharp-pointed knife, thy quick wrist and compact fingers, not one scale remains around the head, the fins, the tail; and tail and fins are shortened, not hacked off. A little salt thrown on the fish, hardens it in two hour's time. It is then seared, that it may not break when it swells, and browned well upon the gridiron, whence it is taken up and laid upon a bed of nicely-peeled and very fresh mushrooms, daintily spread over the strainer. Good part of an extra bottle of generous wine is now decanted into the amethystine element. A white onion or two is sliced into rings, which fall as decorations upon him; a few berries of pepper are now thrown in, with two blades of mace, and an eschalot. The stewpan is then covered; and a careful, slow, epicurean simmer completes the work.

And thus, Companero, you will be made fully to realize that we have in this a precious offering of the ocean to our happy shores."

Are You Troubled.

With conscientious qualms? asked a friend. "You look troubled."—"So, I am," said the sufferer; "but it is with the toothache." "More fool, you," replied the comforter; "get it pulled out, and buy a bottle of SOZODONT, and preserve the good teeth from a like calamity."

Peruvian Bitters

Cinchona Rubra. The Count Cincelon was the Spanish Viceroy in Peru in 1630. The Countess, his wife, was prostrated by an intermittent fever, from which she was freed by the use of the native remedy, the Peruvian bark, or, as it was called in the language of the country, "Quinquina." Grateful for her recovery, on her return to Europe in 1632, she introduced the remedy in Spain, where it was known under various names, until Linnaeus called it Cinchona, in honor of the lady who had brought them that which was more precious than the gold of the Indies. To this day, after a lapse of two hundred and fifty years, science has given us nothing to take its place. It effectually cures a morbid appetite for stimulants, by restoring the natural tone of the stomach. It attacks excessive love of liquor as it does a fever, and destroys both alike. The powerful tonic virtue of the Cinchona is preserved in the Peruvian Bitters, which are as effective against malarial fever to-day as they were in the days of the old Spanish Viceroy. We guarantee the ingredients of these bitters to be absolutely pure, and of the best known quality. A trial will satisfy you that this is the best bitter in the world. "The proof of the pudding is in the eating," and we willingly abide this test. For sale by all druggists, grocers and liquor dealers, Order to: Loeb & Co., agents for Astoria.
