The State Elections.
 The result is just as much a Republican victory as it is a Democratic one. It does not mean that the country wishes Democratic leadership, but it demands that bossism shall be sat down upon in any and every section of the union. That was the keynote of the music played two years ago when Garfield was elected in spite of the prophecies of those who stayed with Grant in the Chicago convention, though the opposing faction won the prize of the presidency and presidential patronage in "the lottery of assassination." Last Tuesday's election is simply a continuation of the same feeling. And it is right. The duties of the president and his cabinet are clearly defined in the fundamental and statutory laws, and they have no more right to do any official act with a view of influencing the vote of a state than the voters of any state have to nullify the acts of congress or trample on the constitution.

If this high tide of usurpative encroachment, this flagrant abuse of power, this turning of the people's governmental mechanism against the people, had not been reached by many successive steps, we should see the waves and hear the roar of popular wrath sweeping over the continent. But it is a fact, that the people had become so accustomed to the progress of this slow but sure revolution that they were not astonished until the president and his cabinet virtually undertook to elect the officers of a state, instead of leaving the people to elect their own officers.

It cost a million lives and some billions of money to put down secession. Dangerous as that heresy was, it was less dishonest and corrupting than the process by which it is worth preserving in our government has been undermined and torn down.

But the line was drawn last Tuesday. A few more cabinet consultations on state campaigns, a few more attempts to put a cabinet officer into a gubernatorial chair to pave the way for the march of presidential ambitions, a few more efforts by a cabinet officer to use the prestige of his position to frighten business men into the support of his candidacy, a few more prostitutions of the executive mechanism in all its departments to low partisan uses and the purposes of schemers and tricksters, a few more brazen presumptions on the stolid indifference of the people to their rights, and there was such an uprising as we hope has put down this business by the ballot as effectually as its elder brother, secession, was suppressed by the bullet.

From reliable authority the W. W. Union learns that it is the intention of the O. R. & N. Co. to begin the building of a new steamer early in the coming year to navigate the waters of the upper Columbia river above Kettle Falls. The river is navigable for a light draft boat for a distance of over three hundred miles, and with a short and easily graded road to Spokane Fall connections can be made between the Northern and Canadian Pacific railroads. When this new branch of service is in operation it will open up a large country to settlement.
