

The Daily Astorian. ASTORIA, OREGON. FRIDAY, NOVEMBER 10, 1882. J. F. HALLORAN, Editor.

The General Result. The result of the election on the 7th inst., varies little from the recapitulation given in yesterday's issue. With the exception of Virginia, which stayed solidly by Mahone, the returns everywhere show Democratic gains. In Alabama the usual 40,000 Democratic majority is increased; so also, in Arkansas; the 102 Democratic majority in California swells to 8,000, the probability now being that the Democrats elect a full state ticket, including six congressmen. Colorado, which gave Garfield 2,800 majority, still stays in the Republican ranks, but Connecticut breaks away, Delaware going Democratic by its usual majority, as do Florida and Georgia. Illinois gives 20,000 Republican majority, while Iowa's 78,000 in 1880, is cut down to 40,000. Kansas, which gave 61,000 Republican majority two years ago, elects a Democratic governor; this is one of the biggest surprises of the whole fight, and can only be explained on the ground of St. John's prohibition record. Kentucky, Louisiana and Maryland give the regular Democratic majority, and to the astonishment of all, Massachusetts repudiates the 53,000 majority she gave to the Republicans but two years ago, and elects a "Democratic" governor—Ben Butler—by 15,000 majority. The Republican majority of Michigan and Minnesota sets off the opposition majority in Missouri and Mississippi; Nebraska shakily sustains the popular will but defeats the proposed amendment to the constitution as regards woman suffrage. Nevada, which by nature and education, is Democratic, gives itself over to that party, body and alleged soul. New Hampshire is Republican and New Jersey Democratic. The last state deserves a vote of thanks for defeating Robeson for congress, the man who squandered $100,000,000 on our "navy." New York performs the greatest political sumersault in the history of the country. From a Garfield majority of 21,000 she goes to a Cleveland majority of 172,000. This is good; it proves that "the boss" can no longer crack a party whip over the shoulders of the voters. It tells Mr. Conkling et al, "you are no longer in power." Pennsylvania tramples on the traditions of a quarter of a century and of two evils chooses the least, rejecting Don Cameron's candidature and electing the Democrat, Pattison. The rest of the thirty voting states give the usual party majorities. Dakota and Washington elect Republican delegates, Utah, Arizona, Wyoming and New Mexico Democratic ones. In Idaho, Singiser, Republican and annexation is probably elected.

There were 293 congressmen elected—exactly the number in the last house of representatives, the next house having 325; the 32 that were already elected gave a Democratic gain, which was greatly augmented by the November election, so that the next United States congress will, for the third time in the history of the country, be composed of a Republican senate, a Democratic house, in connection with a president who is not in accord with either branches of the legislative department. As a general thing the election of the congressmen is the test of party strength. Were this the case this time it would be an overwhelming Democratic victory. But apart from questions of state importance, which includes prohibition, license, woman suffrage, constitutions, etc., the great questions were "shall bossism and political assessments prevail?" Fortunately for our country the intelligence of the nation emphatically answered in the negative.

There were 599 votes cast at the polling place at New Iberia, Louisiana, last Tuesday, but when they counted the ballots the tally showed 645. Those Louisiana slanders don't understand their language.
