They probably contain a larger amount of really valuable arable land than any other region of similar extent church; who talks well; who would, west of the Cascades, at least in this territory. The greater portion of these lands are covered with an unusually light growth of alder, vine maple, spruce and salmon brush, easily cleared; and there are also many small prairies interspersed with this timber, these having as a rule, a rich soil, especially in the lower Chehalis country. All these lands produce the finest grasses, grains, vegetables and fruits, and have been found especially adapted to the dairy interest, which is a leading industry in the country at the present time. The uplands of the country are covered with a magnificent growth of heavy timber, consisting of red, white, and yellow fir, hemlock, cedar, etc., and is pronounced by men of extended experience, to be the finest and best adapted to lumbering purposes of any body of timber as yet known on the coast. There is still an called to see her for seven months. both timber and agricultural, to be had in the county, though it is being taken up very fast, the records in the land office at Olympia show that during the month of October, there were 30 entries of timber lands, and 100 entries of homesteads and pre-emptions made within its limits. The population of the county is variously estimated at from three to five thousand, though this is probably low, as its vote one year ago was 700, and it is expected that the votes cast at the recent election will be found to exceed 1000, though returns are not all in at this writing. There can be no doubt, however, that the population of the county is increasing cent. during the past six months. To new comers in the territory, it wounded womanhood had been is a matter of surprise that a region containing the advantages evident in this case, should, as to population and general development, have remained so far behind other localities in western Washington, less favored by nature. Iuquiry, however, develops the fact that it has remained undeveloped on account of the lack of sufficient means of communication and intercourse with the outside world. This matter has now. however, been so far remedied as order to save the souls of forlorn to admit of prospective and immediate increase of advancement for George Q. By his real wife that man became the father of several children. Upon her death and the assuming of power by the second wife, the father drove every child of his first wife away from home. He gave one delicate child, a little little girl of eleven years of age, at Livingston, and the town is exto a brutal farmer in the country; that man sent the child to tend stock on the mountains, and compelled her to sleep alone in a tent on the moutain side, where every Jessie James fell when he was night the child suffered the agony shot are sold on the premises for of the damned in natural childish twenty-five cents apiece, and sevfear. He has abundant means to provide for his children, and were it not so, he has two strong arms and could earn a comfortable living for them. But the shame of her place haunted the second wife until the first wife died, and then the hate which had been smouldering through the years burst into flame, and she determined that the presence of that woman's children should not be a reproach to her and her children any longer. And the father, embruted by his former acts, having learned to think of his children as he did of his calves by different cows, turned his heart against his first born, and drove all the children which the wife of his youth had borne to him into the street at rapidly-disinterested estimates the bidding of the woman who, placing the increase at 100 per in that way, sought for a respite from the cries which her own the park early enough in the spring to accommodate the tourist travel of next season. It is the intention to build at Livingston the largest ear shops between Portland and Brainerd, and also to construct three relling mills, as a vast deposit of the very best bituminous coal has been discovered within three miles of the proposed new town. Bozeman and Helena, Col. Lamborn stated, both begin to feel the effects of the railway, and the former place is now equal to the palmiest days of Leadville, so far as the sensational features of gambling and dance houses are concerned. The business men of Billings are already making preparations to establish branch houses pected to at once jump into prominence and prosperity.
