Studies in Cats.

WHILE a majority of our scientific men have devoted themselves exclusively to research in the field of electricity and steam, a few patient, noble-minded philanthropists have been silently exploring the domain of science as applicable to cats.

The efforts to which we allude first crystallized some few years ago, in the foundation, by a scientific Belgian gentleman, of an institution for the education of cats, on the carrier-pigeon plan.

His followers and disciples began by making home pleasant for their cats. These luxurious beasts were surrounded by every attention that care could bestow.

After having thus endeared their homes to them, the next move was to send the cats to the scientific person's institute, where they would be taught to miss and sigh for the comforts they had left behind.

stretched out and spitting, into the jaws of the loquacious watch dog. For a while this wonderful contrivance checked the gregarious tendencies of cats, and thinned their peripatetic ranks to a very satisfactory extent.

Only one hope remains to science. The silent army of scientists may have other plans, but they must resolve themselves into decided experiments with electricity. This wire may be stretched along on fence tops, on woodsheds, etc., and connected with powerfully charged batteries concealed in the room of the operator.

The congressional commerce committee has recommended an appropriation for the improvement of the Sacramento and Coquille rivers.
