Then they are taken out, washed in clean water, and laid on flakes to dry, it being found impossible to fry them when wet, the fish all breaking up. After being dried, which on sunny days is done out of doors, and in damp or wet weather in the dry-house, by means of a circulation of hot and cold air, they are fried in oil. This oil is generally cotton-seed or some cheaper him say Jeff is the "BOSS." kind. Then they are packed in the cans by the girls, the smaller fish being put up in oil and the larger in French mustard or in spices. The oil used in packing ought to be pure olive, but it is found impossible to use it, being so expensive and the price of sardines so low. Cottonseed, peanut and other kinds of oil are used in packing. After being there two hours, the water being kept tapped in each can, to let the hot or expanded nir escape, and immediately closed. The can then is air tight, and will keep good for years in packed in cases, and shipped to New York and the west. The sardine in-

"THEIR OCCUPATION GONE."

R. V. PIERCE, M. D., Buffalo, N. Y .: I was attacked with congestion of the lungs, soreness over the liver, severe pain in the joints, a burning fever, and general giving away of the whole system. Failing to find relief in remedies prescribed, I tried your "Golden Medical Discovery." It effected my entire cure. Your medicines have only to be used to be appreciated. If every family would give them a trial, nine-tenths of the doctors would, like Othello, find their occupation gone. Yours truly, L. B. McMILLAN, M. D.
