Saw Mills for Astoria.

Astoria should have two or three large saw mills owned by her own citizens to saw lumber for export. The three mills now sawing here have all they can do to saw for the local trade and make boxes. Astoria, being situated at the mouth of the river, offers unusual inducements for this business. The logs are of as good a quality as found on Puget Sound, and are to be had in great abundance. The cost of towing logs to the mill is less than to points above Astoria. The cost of shipping lumber to any of the foreign ports will be less from Astoria than from any points above Astoria. Besides these advantages there will be another very great advantage over any other point farther inland. A vessel of the largest size can load with lumber at Astoria to her fullest capacity without being required to lighten any part of her cargo. The people of Seattle and New Tacoma have shown commendable enterprise in building up their saw mills to add to their wealth and profit. It will be well for Astorians to follow their example. One or two of our canneries would furnish excellent site and opportunity for the enterprise.

A Statesman's Views.

HORATIO SEYMOUR, the political Nestor of the empire state, who was defeated for the Presidency fifteen years ago, is a man whose views are always entitled to respectful consideration. He rises from the province of petty political tricks to the higher plane of statesmanship. In a recent interview, speaking of leading public questions he said:

"Many aspects of the tariff are now being considered as they were not formerly, and there is a growing interest with regard to the question in the minds of our farmers and producers, and also with the great carrying interest. As transportation is now mainly upon the railroads, the cost of carrying must be influenced by the cost of building such roads. The tariff on iron is very high, and to pay for iron and the duty on it the capital of a hundred companies, on which dividends are now paid, must be enlarged. Here again the increased cost of clothing to laborers must be added to their wages. If all the items of expense of building a railroad growing out of duties are considered, they will be found to amount to a large sum. This is added to their charges, and the increase mainly falls upon our farmers and tends to lessen exportations. Thus it may be that the carrying interests may take alarm. We have seen that both France and Germany have shown an inclination to shut out the products of our country. If Gladstone's administration should be overthrown and the Tory party should come into power in Great Britain it will probably impose tariffs upon our grains and other kinds of food export, for the landholders of Britain are severely pressed by our competition. Those who oppose free trade in Britain are aided by the speeches and arguments of indiscreet high tariff men in this country. All classes now study the prospects of the export of our products in making up their opinions as to the business prosperity of our country. If the policy of our country aims at cutting off all imports, it will end in the destruction of our export trade. I think this will be the principal subject of discussion in the near future. In the presidential campaign next year I think it will be a subject which will most occupy the public mind, without regard to party platforms. I think that the true policy is in adhering to a revenue tariff. I am friendly to the manufacturing interests. I think the great danger to their success grows out of the extreme views of men claiming to be their champions. If it is true that sound policy demands a protective tariff here, then it is true it is demanded by the interests of all other countries. The discussion of this topic will be of good use in leading men from the minor subjects of partisanship, and will build up a class of political leaders who will not merely seek the spoils of office. Men do not make discussions—discussions make men, as was the case in the days of Webster, Clay, Calhoun, Van Buren and Wright. I conclude that Beck, of Kentucky is a gentleman who may not be obscure in the discussion of these questions. The Republican party is now favorable to a protective tariff, while I think a majority of the Democratic party prefer a revenue tariff. I do not think all the members of either party are entirely in accord on these questions, but I think it will be a prominent question in the next presidential election, because the high tariff men will force the fight, and while I do not, of course, know the result of the next election, if the views I hold are correct, they will govern the end."

Indisputable Facts.

It would be cheaper in the long run for Portland to pension the hungry ghoul who want Lapen's place and let the matter drop.—Statesman.

There is a vast empire open yet for settlement from The Dalles to the Rocky Mountains, and one can see by occasional visits to that section how rapid this is being populated and the visible improvements made in the various towns. The empire of the northwest is destined to become the granary of the world.—Standard.

Natural locations, choice sites, outside help, fine surrounding country, etc., are not alone sufficient to build up cities, nor are they to be compared with enthusiasm, enterprise, intelligent aim and determined effort on the part of populations located at points in nowise comparable.—Post-Intelligencer.

Yesterday a star route trial juror, Geo. B. Sheriff, was ill, and as a consequence there was no session of this interminable event in the already long history of American jurisdiction. Happy sickness, joyful event, as it relieved 50,000,000 of people from reading that stereotyped line "At the morning session of the star route trial," etc.—News.

The telegraphic service of the northwest is inadequate—miserably inadequate. It is impossible to get news service performed expeditiously, to the amount required, and commercial business is often delayed simply because the company has not wires to carry it. For the great increase of business which the northwest affords the company has provided no proper facilities. If note has been taken of the growth of the country and the demand for additional service the knowledge has not been acted upon.—Oregonian.

We would not only exempt all new manufactories from taxation but the old as well, thus placing them on equal footing in competing for business, and would go even further than this, we would advocate that the city of Seattle offer as an inducement to any firm who would agree to invest not less than $50,000 in any legitimate manufacturing business a free site within the county and a premium of $5,000 for the one first in operation, and it is safe to say that inside of a year we would have a paper mill, a beet sugar factory and a boot and shoe factory.—Seattle Herald.

Woman's Advancement.

ABOUT sixty years ago Hannah Adams went into the Boston Athenaeum to read. It was the first time that a woman had gone to a public library to avail herself of privileges that had belonged exclusively to men, and all Boston was shocked by the innovation, declaring Hannah Adams out of her sphere. To-day there are more women reading books in the great public library of Boston than men, but who will say they are out of their sphere, or that households are neglected, or home life disturbed because Boston women are well read? Had Hannah Adams done her reading at home she would have been in her sphere. But she could not get access to the books she wanted only by going to the Athenaeum, as men did, to read. It did her no harm and probably did the reading men some good. But the reading women in the Boston library to-day are just as much out of their sphere as was Hannah Adams sixty years ago. Nearly twenty years ago the first woman suffrage convention was held in Washington, and the meeting was broken up and rendered a failure by the ridicule of noisy men and boys, whom the police pretended to suppress, but in reality encouraged in their lawlessness. It was a greater innovation than reading in a public library, and the women were not only out of their sphere, but decidedly unwomanly. Today, says the Capital, the same women who were so ridiculed then can fill the largest hall in the city with an audience second to none other for culture, intelligence and social position. But these women are just as much out of their sphere now as they were twenty years ago. Every innovation has its pioneer. Every movement has its leader. Hannah Adams was the pioneer to open the books in public libraries to women, and the women suffragists have opened the way for women to find their sphere, wherever they can be most useful in making the best of their opportunities for self-improvement, self-support, and the support of those dependent upon them. They have educated public sentiment, and today it is the woman who works and is independent that is respected, rather than the woman who is idle and content to find her sphere in a life of idleness. It is no longer a question whether women shall work for a living, but what shall they do, and can they render as valuable service as men? It has been decided that as teachers their services are often more valuable than the services of men. They are often given a preference over men in stores, and in many kinds of work are equal with men.

The Denver and Rio Grande railway, the new transcontinental line to San Francisco, via Ogden and the Central Pacific railway, was completed last Thursday, the last spike being driven at Ogden, and connection made with the Central Pacific road at that point. Through trains began running at once. The completion of this line is regarded as an important event, establishing a new transcontinental system, passing through magnificent scenery, and tributary to the most important towns and cities of Colorado and Utah.

The secretary of the interior has decided adversely upon the application of the Northern Pacific for the withdrawal from settlement and entry indemnity lands lying twenty miles or more beyond the original alternate sections granted in the charter, but has sanctioned the action of the commissioner of the land office in withdrawing indemnity lands adjoining alternate sections.
