Nude Photographs.

Of all the modern methods blackmailing women, none is so utterly vile and cowardly, and withal so dangerous as the nude photograph use. The modus operandi of the game is exceedingly simple. To the photographed body of a naked woman, generally taken in some indecent posture, is affixed the photographed head of a well-known society or professional lady, and this combination being retaken, the shockng result can be readily imagined. The victim is, of course, soon made aware of the filthy counterfeit's existence by her prosecutors, and then she is given the alternative of buying up the lot at a ruinous price, or of dragging her name before the public and the courts, in a matter which any ensitive woman must necessarily shrink with shame and norror. Should she remain silent and ignore the whole business the photographs are actively circulated among her friends and acquaintances, and this, to most women, would be regarded as an even more intolerable outrage than, either publicity of the payment or black
