

The Daily Astorian

ASTORIA, OREGON: WEDNESDAY, MAY 23, 1912

A twenty-four pound salmon was caught last week near Oregon City.

The C. S. Hulbert went up stream yesterday.

Halibut weighing one hundred pounds are being caught near Port Townsend.

The American bark Coloma, Capt. Cyrus Noyes, is expected about the 1st prox.

Skating and bicycle riding at Occidental Hall next Friday and Saturday evenings.

Gray's harbor will be surveyed this season under the supervision of Capt. Bowles, U. S. N.

Reserved seats for Friday evening's performance of "Whims" can now be had at the New York Novelty Store.

The editor of the Sunday Welcome was the first American born in San Diego Co., California, and of such is the Kingdom of Heaven.

Captain Healy, of the revenue cutter Covina, has received orders to proceed at once to Alaska to take charge of a station during the fishing season.

George W. Hill, of Stark's Point has received a patent on a file handle which is a most ingenious device. He was yesterday offered $1,000 for the patent right.

State Senator Voorhees, of Marion Co., was shot three times near Woodbury, last Monday by a discharged employee. The surgeons hope to save his life.

We are more sorry than surprised to hear that one of the delinquent subscribers of the East Portland Fishboat is to be hanged. There is such a thing as retributive justice in this wicked world.

Charles Wilson mate of the steamer North West, and brother of the captain, was killed at Astoria last Monday by being hit on the head by a sweep of the crab, which broke from the horse while hauling the steamer on the ways.

The Shoalwater Bay Transportation company have concluded to build a $14,000 steamer this season. The contract for building the hull has been given to Jos. Paquet of East Portland. The Willamette Iron Works will put in the machinery.

The following from the Salem Statesman shows that some things can be done as well as others:

We have for sale our subscription account on J. Irvine, of Halsey, which we will sell or trade for anything except another subscription on the said J. Irvine.

Talking of hams, the Oregonian very correctly suggests that there should be "no insuperable difficulty in producing a stethopygus breed of hogs." True, and yet the emphatic character of the enterprise has to be considered as well as the probability of resulting indelicacy.

The McMinnville Baptist college is completed. It is built of brick, with a stone foundation twelve feet in height, and is exclusive of the twelve-foot basement, three stories in height. The ground floor is 98x100 feet. The cost of the building was $25,000. It will be dedicated on June 12.

If the Secretary of State of the commonwealth of Oregon will consult a geography he will learn that Astoria is within the limits of said commonwealth. It is hoped rather than expected that he will add to his great stock of erudition a few points of minor though essential importance.

The British ship Finnore will carry 2000 cases of salmon from San Francisco to Liverpool shipped by R. D. Hume & Co., and 2000 cases shipped by the Carqueen Packing Co. The Finnore is the largest sailing vessel ever constructed. She is a four-masted steel ship, 310 feet long.

The Tacoma News thinks "it is refreshing to see a man like Mr. Villard come down to the level of the people and talk with them." Tut, tut! "Upon what meat hath this our Caesar fed that he has grown so sudden great." "Level of the people!" The man that wrote that would lick Villard's boots for a $20 gold piece.

Astoria's "great expectations" in connection with railroad prospects have not been diminished within the past few months. Indeed, if the "best laid plans of mice and men" do not "gang aft aglee" in this case, Astoria will add materially to her proportions and importance within the next few years.—Port Townsend Argus.

The regular spring finding of mysterious weapons is reported from Umatilla. This time there are two, "one loaded with piano, the other loaded with coal oil." In about ten days the snake stories come due; about the middle of next month look out for big yield of fruit, and along toward midsummer the heated imaginations of the romancists conjure up all manner of marvels.

Drowning of B. Erickson.

The death roll of Columbia river fisherman is a long, and record of names of hardy men, who, caught in the treacherous breakers, have been swept to instant death. Every season it is a common occurrence, and in recording or reading the announcement, one uninterested does not realize the poignant grief of relatives and friends to whom the waves give no answer but the brief record "Lost." At an early hour yesterday morning, B. Erickson, of the Point Adams Packing Co., and his boat puller were about starting home when off the wreck of the Great Republic, a breaker upset the boat. Erickson scrambled up on the capsize boat and shouted to his partner, "Come this way, and I'll pull you up here." Just then another breaker washed him off and drowned him, the same breaker throwing the boat puller against a snag that stuck up on the spit and to which he clung. Deceased was in his 37th year; he leaves a wife and child. The Longshoremen's association, of which he was a member, offers a reward of $25 for the recovery of the body of their comrade.

As it Goes

The Polaris learns from what it considers reliable authority that all the vast enterprises of the Northern Pacific Railway and O. R. & N. Co. will be located in Albina, including the grand union depot. All work on the Kalama extension of the Northern Pacific has been ordered stopped, and the east line force has been transferred to the east side, where the work of filling and grading has already commenced. It is now positively asserted that the mammoth hotel, upon which the Portland public had set such great expectations, will not be constructed, or at least that the building of it has been postponed to an indefinite period. The aim now of the Transcontinental Companies appears to be to concentrate every effort toward the completion of the grand operations in Albina and vicinity.

Aster Lodge No. 6, K. of P., meets to-night. The Grand Lodge will meet at The Dallas June 5th.

The Polaris is authority for the statement that a man has been found who has tired Hansen out, talking to him. "He tired me out. His were not general but all the minute questions that it was possible for a man to ask about a new country and its people. Why I've told that man enough to make a book as big as a house, and I'll bet ten dollars he'll come here to-morrow and ask me what I know about Africa as a good point for the emigration. I'm going to read up in 'Stanley's Dark Continent' so as to be ready for him. I never allow an emigrant to go away dissatisfied."

The Victoria took on cannery supplies at Kinney's cannery yesterday afternoon, en route to the land of the midnight sun. An exploring party goes along, consisting of Lieut. Schwatka, in charge; Dr. Wilson, medical officer; Chas. A. Homan, topographical engineer; Sergeant Gloster, and others. The expedition will land at Chilean, make a portage, thence about forty miles to the head of Lewis river, a tributary of the Yukon, and thence down the Yukon about 2,000 miles, exploring all tributaries and intervening country. The party expects to be gone about five months and will make a chart of sections they visit.

Getting a Drink

Experience has proved that obstacles to the procuring of drink diminish the quantity consumed. If a man can get a drink next door he will get one whenever he wants it, and whether he wants it much or not. If it is a block or two off his desire will have to be greater than in the first instance in order to induce him to go out of his way for it. If on his road home there are saloons convenient, the chances are, if he likes liquor, that he will take a drink every time he goes back and forth. If he be not excessively fond of it, nor a slave to it, he will not put himself to any great inconvenience for the sake of a drink. Indeed, a man's appetite for liquor may be gauged pretty accurately by the trouble to which he is willing to put himself for its gratification. The same is true of every passion, appetite, taste and desire. Where your treasure is there will your heart be also.

This every day experience of human nature is confirmed by observation. Statistics show that since public houses have been closed on Sundays in Scotland there has been a decrease of twenty-one per cent. in the sale of spirits; that in Sweden since an alteration in the liquor laws took place which reduced the places for the sale of spirits in the whole country to 450, drinking has enormously fallen off; whereas in Switzerland, where public houses since 1879 have increased from 17,807 to 21,838, there has been a marked increase in the consumption of spirits and drunkenness. Those people willing to sacrifice everything for the sake of liquor, though more numerous than they should be, are still comparatively few in number.

Of course, the prohibitionist will spring at once his favorite dogmas that prohibition is the one and only principle calculated to discourage the consumption of liquor. If closing half the saloons diminishes the consumption of liquor, he says, then closing them all will wholly or almost wholly stop it. But experience proves that while true theoretically, practically this is not true. There are always practical limitations to certain laws. If it were not so, locomotives could be built to travel 1,000 miles an hour, steam engines that would raise 1,000,000 tons. Up to a certain point force and pressure are effective; beyond that everything flies to pieces, like the prohibitory law.

There is no question that if the number of individual fires in a place were to be reduced the number of conflagrations could be largely reduced also. If there was in use a cheap substitute for fuel, like gas, many insurance companies would probably have to go out of business. Now, if under those circumstances the city government should insist upon the use of gas-fuel wherever the present mode of using fire is dangerous, it could accomplish a needed and useful reform. If instead of doing this, it should pass an iron-clad law absolutely prohibiting, under all circumstances, stoves, steam-heating, grates, furnaces, etc., the law would be a dead letter. There would be so many preferring the old mode of heating to the new one, that a strong public opinion would sustain or wink at a strong open and general violation of the law in all places, whether dangerous or not. Feeling that their own liberty was necessarily trampled upon by so sweeping a law, people could not insist upon its partial enforcement where it ought to be enforced. They would say: "The law is absurd. I will not obey it. And not being willing to obey it in my own case where it is not reasonable, I cannot insist upon its obedience in cases where its enforcement is reasonable." So the law, like the prohibitory law, would fall to the ground of its own dead weight.—Free Press.

Sentenced in Jargon

The four Indians convicted of manslaughter in the U. S. circuit court for the killing of Mulherrin in Umatilla county, were brought into that court yesterday morning to receive sentence. The court in passing sentence recounted the circumstances of the killing as adduced by the evidence, by which it was shown that the victim had been the aggressor. But inasmuch as the killing was unusually atrocious and brutal, the judge felt called upon to impose a sentence of proportional severity. Each of the Jusky savages were sentenced to serve a term of ten years in the state penitentiary. Judge Deady, who, it seems, like many other old Oregonians, is thoroughly familiar with the Chinook jargon, communicated his sentence to the brutal savages in a language they could thoroughly comprehend, but they took it all with that sullen silence peculiar to savage barbarians such as they.—Standard.
