SELIG. robberies and assassinations. What is going to be done with these savages? Are they once more to be collected on a reservation, there to be fed and fatted until they are ready for another raid? In the first place the leaders of this band ought to be hanged, and that quickly, and the remainder be transported out of Arizona and New Mexico. Their tribal organization ought to be care fully but thoroughly de stroyed, and individual families ought to be distributed among the agencies of reservations in Northern California, in Oregon and Dakota, where Apaches so distributed and no longer united, would be By L. E. SELIG. harmless. They are the lowest of American Indians, and most brutal and incorrigibly terocious. The least that can be done with then is to place them where they will

THE intimate relations between this country and England is singularly illustrated by the fact that the present disturbance in Ire land is likely to become an impor tant factor in our national politics The question of tariff and free trade comes up in the next election, and if the free Americans of Irish descent who help so universally to run this country can be shown that a vote with the free trade party will help England, it will be to them the strongest inducement to oppose it. Campaign literature is already being pre pared, and will be in circulation where it is expected to do the most good.
