

The Daily Astorian.
ASTORIA, OREGON:
TUESDAY, JULY 3, 1883

The bank closes at noon to-morrow.

No fire meeting last night. Too much "business."

Yesterday was a sad day for Astoria. A costly lesson indeed.

One thousand men are employed in the Skagit River logging camps.

What a grand amount of free advertising the Fourth of July gets.

Never was Chinook turkey fatter or better flavored than this season.

There will be a special meeting of the city council at one o'clock this afternoon.

A respectable delegation from this city will be present at the Portland festivities to-morrow.

Never in the history of this generation has the country needed rain as badly as at the present time.

On every side, between here and Portland may be seen a forest fire—a cloud of smoke by day, a pillar of fire by night.

The West Shore for June is of local interest, containing well executed lithographs of Astoria residences and scenery, and a fair article on our county resources, etc.

The announcement of the Williams University will be read with interest by those who are desirous of procuring an education without extravagant outlay.

The advertisement of Sherman & Hinman's circus appears this morning. This company enlarged and improved plays all it advertises and is composed of genuine merit.

U. S. Marshal E. S. Kenney, of Portland, has made his office pay all its expenses, and leave a surplus of $2,000 from fees received during the year ending June 30th. A good showing.

The E. T. Crowell has on 22,000 cases. She has till next Monday to load but will probably get her cargo aboard this week. She will be followed by the fine bark Kate F. Troop, which will go on berth to load salmon.

Round trip tickets to Portland and return will be sold by the O. R. & N. Co., at their place, good till the 6th, for $2.40. Parties going up to Portland to-day or to-morrow can use a round trip ticket if returning on the 6th or 6th.

Forty-five dollars per month "and grub" is offered to farm laborers on the Sound. Eight dollars per month is paid in Iowa this season for the same kind of work, and the probability is the Iowa man works the harder of the two.

The N. Y. Sun says that eggs are imported to that city from Europe. From the highly-flavored specimens sometimes found on Astoria tables it would almost seem as though European eggs had reached this far-off western shore.

John Carlson who is down from Skamokawa with a bad case of salmon poisoning suffered the amputation of the little finger of his left hand. It is by no means certain that the operation will obviate the necessity of further treatment.

C. E. Van Horn, a thorough going business man, the clever agent of Sherman & Hinman's circus is in the city. We've never known him to advertise anything that wasn't first class and the circus of which he is justly proud, will doubtless draw a crowded house next Saturday.

The receipt of a complimentary ticket to the Knights' ball to-morrow evening is acknowledged. The fact that the affair is under the management of Astor Lodge No. 6, is of itself sufficient guarantee that those who participate will be afforded thorough opportunity for enjoyment.

Servant girls are scarce at $30 per month. A case in point is that of a prominent family in this city, who employed a servant girl a few months ago at $25 per month. Finally she grew home-sick and her salary was increased from time to time, until she was receiving $40; and notwithstanding she was receiving that pay she gave up the position, and now a heathen fills her place.—Seattle Herald.

Capt. Whitcomb returned from Tillamook yesterday only to learn that while away his darling little daughter had died. She woke Saturday night in great distress, and before the mother had time to summon medical aid she breathed her last. But a few hours before in perfect health, and now, a corpse. The grief-stricken parents have the sympathy of the community. The funeral will take place at two o'clock this afternoon.

A TERRIBLE DISASTER
The Most Disastrous Fire in the History of Astoria.

Yesterday was an exceedingly warm day. The wind blew steadily from the west, but the streets and house walls felt warm. The long continued drought had made the whole city unusually dry, and even where a careless passer dropped a cigar stump, the smouldering plank showed how little cause was needed to start a dreadful blaze. About six o'clock the breeze had gone down in a measure, the streets were full of people when suddenly the dreadful fire alarm was sounded. A dense volume of black smoke and a column of fire showed that it was no common scare, but that Astoria's worst fears were realized. Quick as it takes to write it the companies were on the ground to find the Clatsop mill, formerly Geo. Hume's, in a sheet of flame. The fire swung around from the engine room where it seemed to have originated, and licked up the lumber piles and store houses, giving out the most intense heat. No. 2's were stationed by Chief Barry in front of Barth & Meyer's, No. 1's on Hume's dock. The efforts of the department were at first to confine the fire to its original limits, but the cursed wind fanned the fiery mass which set the houses across 6th street in a blaze. A large barn standing on Squemoque street was full of goods and coal oil, this was the point centered on by the department. Streams were put onto it, and an opening being made in the building, hundreds of cases of coal oil were carried up to Olney street. The ponds were thrown into the water, and notwithstanding the intense heat, every case of coal oil was got out.

We have never seen a hotter fire, nor one in which the firemen worked harder. Indeed nothing but the most superhuman exertion saved that building. Everyone worked. The idea suggested to blow up the building was a good one, and should our unfortunate little city ever be scourged so again, the first and only thing to do will be to blow up or pull down all in the way of the fire and cut off all connection that it would be likely to feed on. It was evident from the first that all on the roadway between the saw mill and O'Brien's hotel was doomed. No time was there to save anything. The dry houses were glowing and burst into sheets of flame that instantly spread. Every available force was brought into requisition. Men worked till they dropped and others took their places. They stood in clouds of smoke and kept the fire at bay; Flavel's pump sent a good stream; the one lack was sufficient hose to throw another stream; the old hand engine was brought up from Hostlers wharf but was of little avail. The fire leaped across the street and beginning at the O. K. lodging house burned that, Greenberg's store next and the great column of crimson flame swept down the roadway. Amid the roar of the advancing flames swept on by the breeze, could be heard the crash of falling timbers and the sharp detonations of cartridges. The roadway was one solid mass of flame. The houses, the street itself, the sidewalks, everything. The history of that dreadful hour can never be written. There was no frenzy. From Frank Fabre's down past Luigi Serra's, and Mrs. Grants, to Ike Foster's and across to Foard & Stokes, and on the other side from Spearth's down past the Centennial, everyone saw that there was no help and that their property was doomed. Nothing left but to seize money and valuables and rush out up the hill. It was awful. It is useless to attempt any description of it. Where everything was built of wood, dry and seasoned, a wind blowing and the great masses of flame advancing with appalling speed, the wonder is that there is no loss of life to report. To talk of what "might have been" had Chief Engineer Barry's orders been carried out, is useless now. He sent a written order that showed excellent judgment and one which should have been obeyed. His idea was to mass three streams on one point and check the fire from crossing where the O. R. & N. dock presented an interesting morsel for the fire. But through some misunderstanding that was not done. Perhaps it couldn't have been. Barry was up in front and he and indeed every member of the three companies did all that men could do, to stop the fire. When the flames threw out long crimson tongues through the O. R. & N. dock it was evident that everything in that end of town was gone. Mr. Noyes and the clerks got out the books of account, and valuable papers. Everything else was a total loss. The docks and coal bunkers, the immense amount of goods, including $50,000 worth of salmon, 4 miles of water pipe, etc., is gone. Of the 10,000 cases of salmon the Scandinavian had 3,000 cases insured, the Occident 2,000; the I. X. L. had 1,000; the Astoria Packing Co., 1,000; the Point Adams Packing Co., 1,000 uninsured.

The burning of Foard & Stokes' store furnished an example of depravity that we would prefer not chronicling; human nature does get very low: brutes in human shape stood there stealing, breaking open cases liquor, guzzling down wine, and throwing provisions to their comrades in boats below. A man that would steal during a fire deserves but one punishment, and that is death.

By half-past seven the fire was at its height: the O. R. & N. dock was one mass of yellow flame: the steamers swung out into the stream, their decks filled with silent spectators; every house-top was covered with men who ceased throwing water on roofs and walls to gaze on that sublime spectacle. The flames were resistless: a blast took the fire under the roadway to burst up in a dozen places, and house after house twisted into ruin. At the upper dock it spent itself for want of further material, one of the thickly settled area from the sawmill to O'Brien's hotel, nothing at eight o'clock was left but the last mentioned building. On the hill-side, the saving of the private residences seemed miraculous. Ed. Taylor's house was the point of danger. By superhuman exertions it was saved, and with it a large number of buildings that stood in the greatest peril. Every one in the vicinity had packed up in residences, and had Mr. Taylor's, Mr. Adler's, the hospital and one or two others caught, the whole of that portion of the city would have been destroyed. Throughout all, the fire companies did all that men could do; they deserve the highest praise for their efforts, as do the citizens that a: the risk of life went into the burning warehouse and carried out case after case of coal oil. To individualize the loss is impossible. Fortunately there was no serious mishap to life or limb. The mill in which the fire originated was a dangerous institution and should not be rebuilt in that place. The greatest loss to the owners was the burning of the immense quantity of manufactured lumber. The insurance was $11,000. The most important was the loss of the O. R. & N. docks. Those structures, including the coal bunkers, with their contents were valued at $125,000. The total loss is about $250,000; the insurance on this is very light. The sight is a sickening one. Where yesterday all was bustle and industry lies a mass of smoldering ruins. The loss is not irreparable. It was to be expected, and we were not surprised. The wonder is it didn't occur before. The lesson is so plain that it is unnecessary for us to add one word of comment. Let us see that it does not happen again.

At nightfall, Captain Miles with a detachment of twenty-five men from the fort came up as a special guard. The chief of police detailed a special force to keep watch, and all over the city a good many private citizens kept vigil. We have, it seems, a lawless element who seize on the opportunity that disaster affords to plunder and thus add to the general distress. An example is needed.

To give a list of those who deserve mention for their pluck, in standing in from the first to the last would fill a column. Every one worked with the best intentions, and that the city is not wholly in ashes is due to the bravery and persistent effort of the fire department and the citizens who aided. Capt. Flavel's steam pump did good work, and had there been sufficient hose even more aid could have been given. The prompt action of Captain Miles in bringing up a patrol guard entitles him to the heartiest thanks of our citizens.

The insurance is between $40,000 and $50,000. A part of the burnt district was owned by W. W. Parker, J. W. Welch, Mrs. J. P. Ward of Portland, and the Kinney brothers. The Clatsop Mill Company, G. W. Coffinberry, Gilbert Christiansen, Isaacs & Greenberg, the Austria Saloon, H. Strudenzki, August Danielson, A. G. Spearth, the Esmond, the Red Star, the Escapades, the Centennial, Frank Fabre's, Joe Charters, Dr. Kinsey, the Campi Restaurant, Kinsey's new buildings, Ike Foster, Foard & Stokes, A. Ginder, Chas. Wallman, the buildings below him, the Astoria Soda works, the laundry, and all the other buildings there, except Headington's, went in one common blaze. The houses on the hill were only saved by the most strenuous exertion. At Carl Adler's, Ed. Taylor's and other private residences the ladies worked most faithfully.

Rescue No. 2, and Astoria No. 1, played streams upon the burning debris all the night, when they were withdrawn. At this writing, (one a. m.) all immediate danger seems at an end.

A Fortune in a Suit of Clothes.

A fine looking young fellow in a neat and stylish suit, called on his girl to take her to the theatre and was received by her with a hearty kiss and embrace. "Mary, it seems, said the delighted youth, 'you love me better than ever, and why this change?'"

"You look so well John, in your new suit, they fit you so nicely."

"Well, Mary, I just thought I'd surprise you; went to M. D. Kant, the boss merchant tailor and clothier, and got me this outfit, he has such a fine assortment this summer and his prices are so extremely low."

"Oh, that was real good of you, John," and two happy hearts went forth to see the show that night.
