

The Daily Astorian.

ASTORIA, OREGON: WEDNESDAY, JULY 11, 1883

No Fear of Incendiarism. SUNDAY telegrams were received in this city last night from San Francisco to the effect that the impression prevailed in insurance circles there that Astoria feared incendiarism, and if that was the case to cancel all policies. The parties who received the dispatches telegraphed back that the impression was unfounded, which is the case. Perhaps it is as well to state here that the vigilance committee which was organized here was organized with the intent to punish thieves who had endeavored to profit by an accidental fire. At no time has Astoria feared incendiaries, nor is there now the slightest reason to apprehend any danger from incendiarism. That impression, if it exists, is an erroneous one. Apart from incidental risk in common with other cities, there is no reason for insurance companies to be apprehensive in regard to policies on Astoria property, nor is there any city on the coast where life and property is safer to-day than in this community.

In Passant. An article in last Sunday's issue on Community of Interests has been objected to by men whose opinion we respect, because in it we spoke of "fanatics who preach prohibition." The question needs no qualification, but a few words of comment may be in order. The word "fanatic" is not a term of reproach. Some of the best and purest men that ever lived were "fanatics." Ignatius was a fanatic; so was Loyola, so was Simeon Stylites, so also Huss, likewise myriads of others from Saul of Tarsus to John Brown at Harper's Ferry. A fanatic is a man or woman who means well, but allows imagination to outrun reason, and gives zeal the upper hand of judgment. A fanatic sees the end of his idea, but wants to go across lots to get there. As to the question of prohibition, it is, in our opinion, impracticable, and therefore useless to argue. It savors of Utopia, it has no show of practical fruition and however deplorable the fact may be, nevertheless it is a fact, as we look at it. You can restrain but you cannot prohibit. From the days of the wedding feast at Cana down to this moment the history of all prohibition movements is alike.

Iowa Politics. How nicely prohibition and politics mix is illustrated at present by the distracted condition of the Republican party in Iowa. At the last state convention the party managers came squarely out for prohibition with the result that a state which gave 78,126 majority for Garfield in 1880, is likely to go Democratic this fall. Iowa has the grandest war record of any state in the Union; she spends annually more money for education than do the eleven southern states put together, and she naturally votes the Republican ticket, and has sent an almost solid Republican delegation to congress for a generation, but the Hawkeye state objects to being run by fanatics or sentimentalists, and kicks as violently as New York did against bossism last fall.

Orders have been received at Stettin from the Chinese Legation at Berlin to stop their work of enrolling a crew and the purchasing of provisions for the new Chinese ironclad, which was constructed there. The orders for the sailing of the vessel for China have been countermanded.

The Brooklyn Eagle praises the Ohio Democratic platform as "flexible," and "a mosaic." The words are well chosen. The resolutions can be twisted into any desired shape, and together they form a curious specimen of the art of inlaying contrasting colors.

Yellow fever has appeared on the Texas frontier, and the most strenuous exertions are being made to prevent its spreading.

The hostile Apaches are to be put on the San Carlos reservation and kept under control of the war department.

Our beloved country has a new official—superintendent of state, war and navy department buildings.

The Portland Commercial Herald finds apology for the tardy action of the holders of the Astoria Land Grant in the decision of a court in 1873. The apologist exhibits more zeal than its employers do judgment.

The News has invented a new term, "cast iron gall," and in its own columns furnishes abundant definition of its meaning.
