Dennis Kearney, the celebrated San Francisco grammar-mangler and wrecker of monopolies, has appeared in Salt Lake City and announced himself as a champion of the Mormon cause. When or how Dennis pretends to have been converted, no one knows. The only spiritual adviser he ever had was his fellow-reformer, the luxurious and turbulent Kalloch, and none have ever heard that Kalloch leaned to Mormonism as a religious theory, to be publicly professed and advocated, though he has always held liberal views regarding certain features of the creed as applied privily to what Beecher calls "the toss and swerve of things material." It may be that Dennis has absorbed as a doctrine what Kalloch entertains only as a fancy. That is irrelevant, however. The main and significant point is that the great sandlotter has pooled issues with the Salt Lake hierarchy, and stands outlined against the Sierra Nevada horizon in his large, openmouthed style, exclaiming to the nations of the earth, after the manner of Lear, "Let copulation

The decrease of population in France, while all the other nations grow in numbers, is one of the modern census-taker's puzzles. Another and much more painful subject for inquiry is the large number of juvenile suicides. That old people, and sick and disappointed people should tire of life.
