

The Daily Astorian.

ASTORIA, OREGON:

TUESDAY, AUGUST 7, 1883

The State arrived in yesterday morning; the Oregon sails to-day.

It is reported that logs are "coming down" seven dollars a thousand now.

The Maid of Orleans with redwood from Humboldt, is in the stream.

The wheat fleet is coming in lively; so far the vessels are all with cargoes.

The American bark Carrie Winslow, 144 days from New York, arrived in yesterday.

M. Jensen has received a patent for his admirable invention, the can-filling machine.

This dry weather wreaks destruction on the sidewalks and streets, which are sadly warped and shrunken.

Mrs. M. D. Kant, who has been on a visit to California, was a returning passenger on yesterday's steamer.

The August term of the circuit court begins at ten o'clock this morning. The official docket will be found in another column.

A loaded truck broke through the street in front of the Occident block yesterday. The thoroughfare receiving prompt repair.

B. A. Seaborg, has bought the cannery at Gray's harbor and is moving men and machinery there to begin canning about the 22d inst.

The A. E. Field leaves for Tillamook at six o'clock this morning. The Miles leaves for Tillamook at six o'clock to-morrow morning.

The Grasmere and Grisdale have received lighterage permits from Washington, and, with the Red Cross, have hauled alongside the old O. R. & N. dock, to discharge sufficiently to admit of further progress.

The Oregonian argues that Portland should have a blow-out on the occasion of the arrival of the railroad magnets after the last spike is driven. Its last argument is a clincher. "Let us spend $7,000, and we will have $50,000 spent here." That ought certainly touch the spot.

The performance at Occidental Hall last evening deserved a larger audience than witnessed it. To-night the company will again appear, and now that the nature of their performance is made manifest they will evidently have a good house. Reserved seats at the city book store.

While Monroe Spedden and family were driving down Wall street last Sunday afternoon, the springs became disarranged and on getting out to arrange them the horse started, throwing the occupants to the ground. Fortunately as the vehicle overturned it fell toward the hill and no serious results ensued. The horse was stopped near D. K. Warren's corner. Anyone finding a broken shaft with metal tip can return it to Capt. Hustler.

Our Astoria machine shops are manufacturing some fine work. At the Astoria Iron Works is now building the first work of the kind ever done in Oregon outside of railroad shops, a steel boiler 92 inches in diameter, intended for the General Canby. This establishment is turning out some fine work. This week the Edith and Westport are receiving attention. Arndt & Ferchen are furnishing the machinery for Parsons & Co's new saw mill at Montesano, W. T. They have recently put in a Westinghouse 32 1/2 horsepower engine at J. C. Trullinger's mill, which is a model of efficiency.

A Fearful Fall

Chas. Thomson, a carpenter aged forty years, employed on the Kinney building, fell from the second story yesterday morning about ten o'clock, a distance of twenty-eight feet, receiving injuries which may prove fatal. He was engaged in adjusting a cornice at the time, and stepping back, missed his footing and was hurled to the pavement. He struck on his head on some bricks that were piled on Genevieve street, and when picked up it was found that he had sustained a compound fracture of the skull; blood oozed from his ears. He was taken to the hospital and last evening was still conscious. He was in the city but a few days, having come from Boone county, Illinois, where his wife and children are living.

Notice to Good Templars

The steamer Lillian will leave Wilson & Fisher's wharf at 6 o'clock sharp, this Tuesday evening, to attend a lecture to be delivered at Knapp's Hall at Knappa. All sojourning brothers and sisters are cordially invited to attend. Fare for the round trip: cents; $1 ladies free. Net profits go to the Orphans Home Fund.

JOE G. CHARTERS, Manager.

Special meeting of Astoria Council No. 995, A. L. of H., on Saturday, August 11, 1883, at 8 o'clock P. M. By order of C. C.

R. V. MONTEITH, Sec'y.

A fine lot of Silverware just received at Adler's—the old, reliable brand.

The Salmon Pack

Last Tuesday we presented a statement by canneries of the pack of Columbia river salmon for the season that closed that day. Below will be found a revised and more accurate list. While even for this we do not claim positive accuracy, yet the final footings will not in our opinion vary 1,000 cases either way from the total appended below:

Table with columns: Names, Cases. Lists various packing companies and their respective case counts.

Total for the season, 629,438. Of this total Astoria's proportion is a large one and shows the concentration of the business at this place. Of the thirty eight canneries enumerated above, twenty-four are at Astoria; the 629,438 cases put up on the river, 420,000 cases were put up at Astoria. The Astoria canneries paid fishermen $1,110,000 for fish, of the $1,550,000 paid out for the catch during the season.

An Astoria Industry

In the preparation of salmon for the canning process, a considerable quantity of unusable refuse is produced, which was dumped into the river as waste until the establishment of oil works by J. H. DeForce, about five years since.

The works were first located where the Seaside cannery now stands, and were afterwards moved to a point up the river. Economy, however, demanded that the works should be below the canneries instead of above them, and so, last spring the works were moved to Smith's Point, on the Youngs river side.

The buildings 65x84 feet, stand on piles in the tide water, and are reached from the shore by a plank walk. The refuse from the canneries is brought to the works in boats, from which it is raised by means of a tub and winch to a set of sixteen tanks, each of the capacity of 2,000 salmon heads.

Here the tank charge is boiled for five hours with steam, then a gate in the bottom allows it to drop into a tank below. There are eight of these tanks, each equal in capacity to two of the upper tanks. Here it is allowed to settle two or three days, when the liquid portion is dipped into a set of small tanks, reboiled by steam and strained. It is then pumped into iron tanks 90 feet away from the main building where it is boiled by direct heat over a furnace. The oil then returns by gravitation to tanks inside the building, when it is allowed to settle and clear before being canned for market.

The business is one which has failed in other hands, and it is only by an economy that seems difficult to improve upon, that Mr. DeForce has been able to establish a profitable industry. The salmon is caught, the entable portion is canned, an oil which is suitable for a variety of lubricating purposes, is extracted from the refuse which is finally utilized as a fertilizer. With all this apparent economy, however, there is a great and serious waste, which probably has not escaped the keen observation of the proprietor. It is an active and potent smell of untold horsepower, which pervades the atmosphere of the entire works.

An Honest Man

Were that old cynic Diogenes to come around in these times he could find the object of his search with little trouble. As an illustration may be mentioned the following: As the last outgoing steamer was lying here, a man went wildly rushing up and down the streets, and at last stopped a well known citizen saying "Look here, do you know ——" "Yes," "Well, I worked for him till quite recently in his logging camp. I am going back home to Nova Scotia, and the steamer leaves in a few minutes. I can't find him, but here is $150 that belongs to him, but he overpaid me that much and I didn't find it out till just now." And handing the citizen the $150, the man started down Main street.
