Tariff and Protection.

For twenty years after the thirteen states had achieved their independence, no effort was made to alter the conditions under which American trade was conducted with the rest of the world during colonial days, except that England's monopoly was abolished. At this time the local industries of the infant republic were confined to those articles which could not be imported, but events occurred then which exercised a deep influence upon the commercial world. The war between France and England resulted in the embargo and non-intercourse acts, and shortly afterwards war between the United States and England followed. The carrying trade between the two countries was blocked and hindered and prices rose greatly. All branches of industry in the United States received a powerful stimulus, and manufactures sprang up everywhere like mushrooms. At the close of the war protection was necessary in order to prevent wide-spread disaster, and the tariff act of 1816 furnished the needed relief to "infant industries." In 1819, 1824 and 1828 further measures were passed still exaggerating the amount of protection. In 1832 the tariff was somewhat lowered, but in 1840 a protectionist agitation was inaugurated on the ground that American workmen could not subsist on wages which would enable them to compete with the cheap labor of Europe. Daniel Webster and John C. Calhoun were the most eloquent exponents of this idea and its success was due in a large measure to the ability of their advocacy. The present condition of American manufactures is that they have been developed to such an extent as to more than meet the demands of the home market, and production has in a measure become stagnant, so that the time seems favorable for commencing the gradual reduction of the tariff, so that American manufacturers may be enabled by cheapening prices to go forth and compete in the foreign markets of the world.

Tax on Tin Plate.

The duty under the new tariff upon sheet iron is from 1.1 cents to 1.05 cents; the new duty on similar sheet iron coated with tin or lead and known as tin orterne plates is 1 ct per pound, so that the duty on fully manufactured plate is a little less than on the sheet iron from which it could be made. The S. F. Merchant thinks that a half manufactured article ought to pay less duty than one fully manufactured, while the policy of protecting and encouraging home manufactures obtains. One of the great advantages of making tin plate in the United States would be that salmon and fruit canners would be able to get plates for their purposes that would not cut to waste and those they cannot get from the English makers. If it is not desirable to make tin plates in America then foreign tin plate should be admitted free of duty as block tin is. Of the $5,000,000 revenue received from tin andterne plate duties, a considerable portion is a direct tax on fish and fruit canners, and another portion on other branches of trade such as lard, coffee, and yeast powder, in putting up which tin containers are largely used. What is the use of a tax on an import which interferes with several trades and does not protect any American industry.

One of the most singular travesties of law that has lately come under our observation is afforded by a recent ordinance passed by the city council of Sacramento, California. Though the law of that state makes gambling a misdemeanor, punishable by fine and imprisonment, yet the Sacramento Sojers have passed an ordinance licensing all gambling games carried on in that city. Here we have the singular spectacle of a municipality authorizing what the state forbids. Should the gambler refuse to pay license, he can well ask "What are you going to do about it?" for the collection cannot be enforced. Were such a stultification as that to occur in Oregon what a good joke it would be on the Webfoot nation.

Sixty public men and several doctors in St. Louis have been questioned by a Republican reporter as to the benefits of hot water as a morning drink before breakfast, and all agree that, as a rule, it is excellent for a disordered stomach resulting from excess in eating or drinking.

It is announced that three of the fifteen volumes of the census reports will soon be ready for distribution. At this rate, suggests the Chicago Times, the report for 1880 will be completed in seventeen and one-half years, or by the middle of 1897.

The deaths from cholera in Egypt to date number 16,448, of which 6,366 died in Cairo. There is an unconfirmed report of a bubonic plague at Damietta.
